Board of Trustees arrives today

By ELLEN DAVIS

Members of the UMass Board of Trustees will be arriving on campus today for two days of meetings with students, faculty and administrators, and a tour of buildings on campus.

Most of the 26-member board, as well as UMass President David C. Knapp are expected to be coming for the visit, according to University spokesman Howard White

This is the first time the Trustees have visited the Amherst campus since December, 1978.

The Board will be arriving this evening to attend a dinner with deans from the University, which will be hosted by new campus chancellor Henry Koffler.

Following the dinner, the Board will have a reception with faculty representatives from various departments on campus.

After breakfast tomorrow morning, the Board will be taken on a tour of some campus buildings, given by University Planner Jack Littlefield.

Among the buildings the Board is expected to tour are the Campus Center and Campus Center Garage, the coal-fired boiler plant, North Village Apartments, a high-rise tower in Southwest, Marshall Hall and annex, French Hall and greenhouse, and Brett Dormitory in Central Residence Area.

These buildings were selected at the request of the Board's Buildings and Grounds Committee because they have been topics of discussion at Board meetings during the past year, University Secretary Ann Hurd said.

"It's difficult to talk about something they haven't seen," Hurd said.

Marshall Hall is slated to be renovated into laboratory space this year, and it's annex is one of the buildings which deferred maintenance expenditures have been requested for.

The Trustees are interested in French Hall and especially its greenhouse because it has sustained neglect due to funding problems, Hurd said.

After the tour, the Board will be attending a luncheon hosted by Student Trustee Richard LaVoice and other student leaders on campus.

At 2 p.m. tomorrow, the Board will have its regular meeting, which is expected to have a long agenda this month, White said.

Among the most important items the Board will be acting on are adoption of the University's 1980 operating budget, which allocates funds from all sources, and approval of the University's maintenance budget request from the state for 1981, White said.

The Board of Trustees is a group of individuals appointed by the governor which serves as the major policy-making organization for the three-campus University of Massachusetts system.

Smooth arrival expected for new students

By ROB STEIN

The arrival of this fall's freshmen class is projected to run smoothly with no repetition of previous year's housing shortages expected.

A slightly smaller class, 3950, was accepted this fall to offset the arrival of last year's freshman class which was the largest in UMass' history, said Dierdre Kedesdy, diretor of freshman admissions.

The number of entering women has gained slightly over previous years, bringing the new student male to female ratio to 50/50, Kedesdy said.

The out-of-state tuition increase caused a drop in out-of-state applications from the 2755 last year to 2351 this year, Kedesdy said.

"The academic quality of this year's freshman class is expected to be as good or better than last year's," Kedesdy said. An exact determination of the median SAT scores and class standings for the entering class will be determined at the end of the add-drop period, she said.

Although it is difficult to determine the exact number of students who will actually arrive to fill their spots in University dorms, housing officials foresee no major problems.

Pierpont Dormitory in Southwest Residential Area, which was the scene last semester of repeated violence including an attempted murder by arson of the head of residence is expected to be peaceful this year, Housing Assignment Coordinator Gerald Quarles said.

"It was like a sinking ship syndrome. Less than one quarter of the residents stayed. There will be a pretty new group of folks in there, a mixture of people," Quarles said.

Renovation of Brett Dormitory in the Central Residential Area, which began last spring, has been completed and will be housing students this fall, Quarles said.

New smoke detector systems await students in some dorms

By CAROL ROSENBERG

Returning residents of Johnson, Pierpont and Webster dormitories and George Washington and John F. Kennedy towers will note additional fire protection this year above and beyond smoke detectors they left in their rooms in the spring.

The nine dormitories are the first of the 41 in the system to receive upgrading in the form of "sophistocated smoke and heat detectors," at a cost of about $250,000, said Robert L. Campbell director of Residential Resource Management, which maintains the dormitories.

"It will probably be one of the most sophistocated alarming systems in terms of dormitories in the country" when completed, Campbell said.

Included in the plan is centralized monitoring systems in the Department of Public Safety and the Physical Plant which will note when a corridor alarm is sounding, he said.

"It will probably be one of the most sophisticated alarming systems in terms of dormitories in the country when completed," Campbell said.

The heat detectors were installed in the corridors of the nine dormitories throughout the summer at a cost of about $100,000 for the equipment and $145,000 for labor.

The installation in the other dormitories will take five years, Campbell said, because it takes about 12 to 16 weeks of electricians work, and may therefore, only be done during the summer.

Smoke detectors were installed in all 41 dormitories during the six-week Intersession of 1978 at a cost of $100,000 upon recommendation of an 18-month study which was completed at that time.

Included in the study were recommendations for the heat detector and central monitoring systems.

Baker and Van Meter dorms and John Adams tower will also receive the new systems as part of their rennovation, Campbell said.

Welcome back!

New dorm lease contract faulty

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT

Students have failed to gain any significant improvements in how the dormitory system is run following adoption this spring of a residence hall contract between students and the University.

The contract takes effect for the first time this fall, and most students in dorms saw it for the first time this summer before they paid their fee bills. Students and student leaders involved in negotiations leading up to adoption of the lease who ostensibly had hoped to win some administrative concessions, and solidify and guarantee University obligations to students, have failed to do so.

What the document does more than anything is cement the status quo, one which in the past students have claimed as unfair, and University leaders have said is the most workable.

The contract does spell out numerous specific responsibilities, such as entailing who is responsible for damages, providing rent refund schedules, and the like, but moreover, it is couched in vagueness and generalities on key items that students have said they feel need to be accounted for the most.

The contract is weak in that it is too vague, its workings and appeal processes are too vulnerable to the political pressures rampant here at UMass, it fails to address past problems encountered in the residence area, it doesn't provide adequate refund mechanisms, and does not guarantee dorm furnishings.

The document was agreed upon following lengthy negotiations by student leaders with the administration. More than a year ago, a group of students and staff members was appointed to draft the contract for the residence hall system.

The group included representatives of the Undergraduate Student Senate and the office of the Vice-Chancellor for students affairs. By last December, the contract was finalized by the committee and sent to Vice-Chancellor Dennis L. Madson, who accepted the report with minor changes and forwarded it to University trustees for apoproval. The Board of Trustees granted final approval this spring, and the contract became part of University policy.

The document falls in a number of areas, based on the assumption that students sought to ensure more than the status quo. The contract may be all that is possible or practical at this time, but it falls short of what many observers expected or say is needed.

Much of the language of the contract that deals with University corrective action in the event of dormitory shortcomings, or what the University will provide to rooms, is too vague.

Some examples: The University will provide "prompt" maintenance in the event of interruptions of utility service. The University shall, "within a reasonable time," try to correct unsafe conditions in residence halls. A student may make minor nonstructural repairs to a room if the University does not make repairs first in a "reasonable" period of time. Any such repairs may be reimbursed, but no time limit is given.

What these provisions do is only put in writing what the administration has said before, but not enumerated. And the old system has more than once proven inadequate, while students have waited and the University promised action.

The contract establishes two committees, the Residential Committee and the Residential Appeals Committee. The Residential Committee has authority to recommend on-campus residential policy to Madson, while the latter is responsible for hearing and acting on student grievances that the University has failed to live up to the contract, or appeals of University determination that a student has not lived up to the provisions.

The first committee will be made up of students from the residence areas, a member of the student senate, housing officials, and four members appointed by Madson. The second will be composed of students from the areas, housing officials, and the dean of students.

How these committees will eventually function cannot be known. But it is important to note that they are, by their composition, vulnerable to various political pressures that have been seen in the past at UMass. The Student Senate is one example, and the Recognized Student Organization system and area governments have also been less-than-sterling performers in the past.

The joint obligations clause does nothing to improve conditions, and it, too, merely restates what exists. It states that the University and the student share responsibility for ensuring the quiet enjoyment of dormitory space, and the inability of the University to ensure quiet enjoyment despite a good faith attempt shall not be grounds for termination of the contract. No provisions, although they would be hard to write, are listed for how "quiet enjoyment" is to be made possible. It does nothing to correct situations such as the so-called "Southwest riots" that periodically occur and are found distasteful by some students.

Another weakness is apparent in a clause dealing with rent rebates and refunds, in which no such rebate or refund will be made to a student with a room unfit for occupancy unless "significant hardship" has been experienced by the student. Significant is too vague to have a specific meaning, nor is "unfit" defined. Consider the cases of Southwest Residential Area tower residents whose roofs have leaked for years.

And finally, in room furnishings, the contract again is deficient. The contract states that furnishings may vary from dorm to dorm, but they "will include at least a bed frame and mattress, desk unit and chair, and wardrobe or closet. What about desk lamps, telephone tables, curtains, and other such items?

Student leaders who originally marched forth with the dorm lease concept ostensibly sought to improve life in the dorms for students, and for administrators who run them as well. Also, to improve conditions in the dorms, and spell out student and University obligations to one another.

But what has emerged from the long process of negotiating a lease is a watered down restatement of what currently exists. In fairness, it must be noted that the document does indeed provide specifics of dorm and residence hall operation that were missing before, information that will improve the management—from both a student and administrative outlook—of one of the nation's largest dormitory systems.

But in view of avowed goals stated by students and their leaders at the start of the negotiations, the contract does not measure up to what was expected of it.

UM senior, employee seek council seats in Northampton race

A 20-year-old UMass student and a UMass employee are among the candidates seeking Democratic nomination for city council in Northampton from their respective wards in the town's primary on Sept. 18.

Senior Timothy O'Leary is seeking the nomination from Northampton's Ward 5, and UMass Chief of Police Robert Joyce is seeking the nomination from Ward 6.

Joyce is running unopposed for his spot, and O'Leary's opponent is Francis Sienkiewicz, a 43-year old plumber.

O'Leary, an accounting major at Umass, is a memer of the Student Senate and President of the Massachusetts State Student Association. If elected, he will be the youngest city councilor ever in Northampton.

Campaign manager for O'Leary is Thomas Clark, also a UMass student.

Joyce, 41, has been Chief of Police at UMass since 1974.

New service offers taped information

The Dean of Students Office, located in 227 Whitmore, is offering a new service this fall which will provide information to students at UMass.

The service is called TIPS—Taped Information Phone Service. Topics offered by the new service will include current events, information on add-drop and pass-fail, sports information, and descriptions of various positions on campus.

About 50 tapes, ranging from 1-5 minutes are expected to be ready by the third week in September, according to the Dean of Students Office.

Changes likely in CC food service

By DAVID ALLEN

There may be some changes in the Campus Center Food Services this fall, following the change-over this summer from the SAGA Management Corp. to an in-house management set-up.

The food service operation in the Campus Center returned to in-house management on July 1, after being run by SAGA, an outside mangement company since 1974

"SAGA didn't do a bad job," said Art Warren, Director of Auxiliary Services," and we don't know if we can do a better one, but financially, we're sure we can."

SAGA began its association with the Campus Center in 1974 because problems began to emerge with the existing in-house set-up.

"So many management people were terminated at the same time that it brought the problem to a head," Warren said. "At the time it was a matter of how to put a management team together in time to run the Food Service operation," he said.

It was easier to get an outside company, according to Warren. "If we had the on-campus talent we could have remained in-house at the time," he said.

SAGA provided the management personnel to run the Campus Center Food Services in exchange for a guaranteed mangement fee. "They used University equipment and facilities," Warren said. "The only thing that will be leaving us will be the SAGA personnel."

According to Warren, the administration's decision to return to an in-house operation stemmed from an attempt to save money.

"Rather than paying the management and other fees to an outside company, we have the capability to run a money-saving operation," he said.

The removal of the management fee will result in savings to the University of at least $100,000, Warren said.

"Customers should be looking for some exciting changes which will be instituted as soon as is feasible"
—Richard Ellis

To carry on the management transition back to in-house, an interim director, Richard Ellis, was named.

Ellis, who has worked on-campus with the Food Service Department for 15 years, is approaching the job with a positive vitality.

"We will continue as we have been until we can make some honest adjustments," he said. "My basic concern is to do a good job. Any service operation must satisfy its clientele. My main concern is to give the clientele what they want and to do it well."

According to Ellis, the management for the in-house operation has been assembled and things are going "as well as we expected."

Ellis said they will be opening for normal operation at the beginning of the semester and that "customers should be looking for some exciting changes which will be instituted as soon as is feasible."

Warren said plans for renovation of the Hatch, Blue Wall, Coffee Shop, and TOC, as well as changes in services and programming are all in the discussion stages.

"We are attempting to put together a package of how the operation will look in two years," he said.

Other ideas being considered are a full-service deli, where customers could purchase items by the pound and possibly a bakery or pizza and sub shop, according to Larry Ruth, Chairperson of the Campus Center Board of Governors Food Service Committee.

The Board of Governors is also enthusiastic over the possibility of increased student involvement in the Campus Center Food Service operation.

"There is the possibility of future student managerial positions and academic involvement through internships," said Board member John Furbish.

One of the major problems the new in-house operation will face is to overcome the decline in Campus Center business, brought about by the raising of the Massachusetts drinking age to 20 in April.

"The effect of the over-20 drinking age was to cut Campus Center sales by better than 50 percent," Warren said. Both Warren and the Board agree that any attempt to solve this problem must center around imaginative programming.

"What can you do when people can't drink? You can offer them food and food-plus," Furbish said. "Food-plus" consist of "decent entertainment and events," Rooney said.

Programming ideas currently being discussed include theme months, better quality entertainment and a modular renovation of the Hatch, which would cater to the differing interests of clientele, Furbish said.

Besides making a smooth transition from outside management to the in-house set-up, all plans for future services and events are presently in the forulative stages.

"We don't have any set ideas," Furbish said. "We are willing to be responsive to community input and to deal with problems as they occur."

UMass acquires papers of Horace Mann Bond

By ELLEN DAVIS

The University archivists will be busy this fall following the delivery last month of the papers of the late Horace Mann Bond, an important black writer and educator.

A contract obtaining the papers for the University was signed August 3 by Randolph W. Bromery, in one of his last acts as chancellor.

Bond, who lived from 1904 to 1972, was president of Fort Valley State College in Georgia and Lincoln University in Pennsylvania - the first university to have offered higher academic degrees to blacks.

He was also active in many committees and organizations, and was involved in work leading up to the NAACP's 1954 Brown vs. the Board of Education case in Topeka, Kansas.

The Bond collection, which was previously held in Atlanta, Ga., by Mrs. Horace Mann Bond, includes personal correspondence with a wide range of people in this country and Africa, research, notes, speeches, artifacts, and an unpublished biography of the Bond family.

The Bond family has been an important black family in the history of this country, said library Archivist Robert McDonnell, who worked on the acquisiton of the papers.

Bond's father James was a minister, teacher, head of the Kentucky Commission on Interracial Cooperation and financial secretary for Berea College. His son Julian was involved in the Southern Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee (SNCC) during the 1960's and is currently a Georgia State Senator. In the past, he has been suggested as a Democratic candidiate for President and Vice-President. Another son, James, is an Atlanta city councilman.

The Acquisition of the Bond papers, combined with the papers of W.E.B. DuBois, which the University obtained in 1972, makes the University one of the leading centers of black intellectual collections in the country, McDonnell said.

Other large collections are at Howard University, Yale University, Fisk University, Atlanta University, the New York Public Library, and the Library of Congress, McDonnell said.

Both Bond and DuBois, who lived from 1868-1963, were active in many of the same organizations, and were long-time friends.

DuBois was born in Great Barrington, Mass., attended Fisk University, and received his Ph.D. from Harvard. He came to national attention in 1903 with the publication of his book entitled "Souls of Black Folk."

In 1905, he founded the Niagara Movement, a civil rights movement, and in 1910, he was influential in the founding of the NAACP.

The Bond collection is even larger than the DuBois collection, which contains 150,000 - 200,000 pieces brought to the University Archives from New York and Cairo, McDonnell said. The Archives are located on the 25th floor of the library, and are open from 8:30-5 Monday-Friday.

The idea for acquiring the Bond papers came from Meyer Weinberg, a professor in the UMass school of Education. Weinberg knew Dr. Bond and had visited him at his home in Atlanta. In 1977, he dedicated his last book, entitled "A Chance to Learn - A History of Race in Education" to Bond.

"Bond was an extraordinary scholar who wasn't rewarded because he was black," Weinberg said.

"He has a lot to teach us," he said.

UM prof spending the year in China

By ELLEN DAVIS

UMass professor Lawrence Pinkham wasn't kidding last semester when he told his students he was going "as far away as possible" on his upcoming sabbatical.

Pinkham, who heads the Journalistic Studies Department, left with his family at the end of August for eleven months in Peking, China.

The trip is the result of an invitation Pinkham received to do a fellowship at the newly-formed Institute of Journalism in Peking. The Institute is part of the Academy of Social Sciences, a major educational institute in Peking, Pinkham said.

At the Institute, Pinkham said he expects to be mainly responsible for developing programs and training Instructors.

Pinkham said he was reccommended for the fellowship by James Aronson, a fellow graduate of Columbia University who is currently at the Institute.

Pinkham has never been to China, nor does he know Chinese, although he started studying the language last semester. He said he has paid a lot of attention to developments in China.

"There are an enormous amount of things happening in China now," he said, "It should be an exciting time to be there."

Pinkham said China is curently undertaking a major effort to upgrade the quality of its publications, and become more involved in the western world. Many schools in China are also opening up now after being shut down during the cultural revolution, he said.

Next year, Pinkham said, about 40 students are expected to be enrolled at the Institute, the only journalism school in China.

There are currently 12 students in the school, which was founded last year to train journalists to work both in China and abroad, Pinkham said.

He said the students at the school are in their early 20's and have completed the American eqivalent of a bachelor's degree.

Pinkham said he has been told by Aronson that the students at the Institute are "very bright, highly motivated, and eager to learn." They are billingual, and will be working in English.

"It should be an interesting cross-cultural experience," he said.

While in Peking, Pinkham and his family will be living at the Friendship Hotel, a sprawling complex where many foreign guests and experts live.

Besides his work at the institute, Pinkham said he plans to do some traveling and, of course, some writing and reporting.

"It should be a very refreshing experience," he said, "They have a lot to learn from us, but we have a lot to learn from them also. I figure I'm going to learn a lot more than I give."

Pinkham said his wife, who translates French, will also be working in Peking, possibly at the Institute.

KOFFLER

New chancellor takes office

Henry Koffler, an administrator at the University of Minnesota was appointed by the UMass Board of Trustees in June as the new chancellor for the UMass-Amherst campus, replacing Randolph W. Bromery.

Bromery ended an eight-year term as chancellor in August to return to teaching geology at UMass.

Koffler, 56, will receive an annual salary of $55,000, plus a fund of $16,000 for "official entertainment", $3,400 for retirement, money for repairs on the chancellor's house, and use of a state car. He was also given tenure in his area of speciality—microbiology.

Koffler, a native of Vienna, Austria, received a bachelor's degree in agricultural chemistry from the University of Arizona, and a master's degree in bacteriology and a doctorate in microbiology from the University of Wisconsin.

He has also done post-doctoral work in nuclear science at the Oakridge Institute for Nuclear Studies and in molecular biology at the Western Reserve University of Medicine.

Before going to Minnesota, Koffler was chairman of the biological sciences department at Purdue University in Indiana.

New chancellors also took office this summer at the UMass-Boston campus and the medical school in Worcester. Robert A. Corrigan replaced Clare Van Ummerson as chancellor at UMass-Boston, and Robert E. Tranqueda replaced Rodger Bulger at Worcester.

New bus merger brings more service

A merger of two local bus lines, the Five-College Transportation System and Western Massachusetts Bus Lines Route 9 service was completed in August, bringing expanded bus travel between Amherst and Northampton for the fall.

Under the new service, slightly more than 60 round trips will go between Amherst and Northampton a day, free of charge.

No stops will be made in Hadley, however, because the town has refused to pay for a portion of the bus subsidy.

Two deans named

Two faculty members in the College of Arts and Sciences were named deans in August by the UMass Board of Trustees.

Frederick W. Byron Jr., professor and head of the department of Physics and astronomy was named dean of natural sciences and mathematics, and Thomas O. Wilkinson, a sociology professor, was named dean of social and behavioral sciences.

Byron replaces Professor Seymour Shapiro, and Wilkinson has been serving as acting dean.

Approval given to $12 SATF hike

The UMass Board of Trustees in August approved a $12 increase in the Student Activities Trust Fund Fee for this year.

The increase which will raise the SATF fee to $84 a year, had already been put on fee bills for the present semester, pending the board's approval.

The Board granted the 16.3 percent increase in the fee to help reduce a current deficit of $184,000.

The increase was granted with the provisions that 70 percent of the deficit be liquidated in the coming fiscal year, and that no further increases in the fee will be allowed until 1983.

O'Neill appointed new security director

Gerald T. O'Neill, who had been serving as acting security director since June, 1978, was named director of UMass security in July by Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madsen.

As director, O'Neill will be responsible for directing and overseeing about 100 personell, including police officers, security guards and administrative personel.

A 1954 graduate of Stockbridge, O'Neill joined the University police department in 1958.

Legislature gives UM $847 million

UMass was given $84.7 million for the present fiscal year out of the $5.4 billion state budget approved by the state legislature in July. This figure represented a $3.2 million increase over the 1979 University budget, but was about $3 million short of what the University had requested.

University officials said over the summer that although the budget is enough to avoid faculty or staff layoffs, it will be a very tight budget to work with. Some predicted trouble in financing maintenance work and purchasing fuel.

Beatty appointed vice-chancellor

George Beatty, acting vice-chancellor for administration and finance was appointed vice-chancellor for administration and finance in August by the UMass Board of Trustees.

Beatty came to UMass in 1973 as associate director of the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies, and became director of the office in September, 1977.

He was named acting vice-chancellor last August by Chancellor Randolph Bromery, replacing George McBee.

Trustees approve minors proposal

The UMass Board of Trustees gave final approval in June to a proposal which will now allow UMass students to have optional minors.

Under the proposal, a minor will be defined as a package of 15 or more credits offered by a department, group of departments, program, or school. The package will typically include both required courses and electives.

Once a minor has been developed, students taking advantage of it will be given priority in admittance to courses with limited enrollment, after those with majors. Except in unusual circumstances, students will be limited to one minor.

The proposal to establish minors came out of a self-created committee of faculty members from at least 14 departments during the 1977-78 school year.

RSO search fails, Field named head

A search for a new director of the Student Activities Office was cancelled in August, and Dean of Students William Field was named acting director of the office for this year.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said he cancelled the search for a new director because of questions raised by search committee members concerning the search process, and the two candidates recommended as finalists.

The two candidates who had been recommended for the position by the committee were Douglas Morton, Director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, and Michael Pill, a lawyer and former member of the Campus Center Board of Governors.

Resident Assistants get fee waivers

Residence Assistants will return this fall to half semester rent waivers, under a proposal announced this summer by Student Government Co-President Richard LaVoice.

Under the proposal, the floor counselors will pay $210 a semester, while other residents pay $420. The counselors will also receive $502 annually in salaries, at a pay of $15.68 weekly.

LaVoice said Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson was instrumental in the counselors receiving the partial waivers. He said the Residence Assistants originally requested total rent waivers.

"We didn't get everything we wanted, but we did get something - the Vice Chancellor really liked it, he came from a strong residence hall background," LaVoice said. According to LaVoice, there are 370 RA's on campus.

10,000 come to conventions at UM

Around 10,000 people from all over the country came to UMass this summer to participate in a wide range of conferences held at the University.

Perhaps the most interesting conference was that of 2000-3000 trancendental meditators who converged on the University in what was billed as the First Annual World Peace Assembly.

The group claimed that by the harmony of so many people meditating together, they could reduce violence and stress in the world.

Other conventions over the summer included the United States Student Association, the New England Camera Club, Boy Scouts of America, and the United States Cheerleaders Association.

Together, the conferences, which numbered around 40, were expected to generate $1.5 million gross revenue, according to Conference Services Director Mark Spengler.

No repairs done on CC Garage

The Campus Center Garage remained a source of controversy over the summer. In July, Acting Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty announced that recommended waterproofing work on the garage, which was planned to get underway at that time, was not going to be done.

To help explain the controversy over the garage to students, the Campus Center Board of Governors put together a display on the garage in the area outside the Campus Center Coffee Shop.

Solar energy project planned

By CAROLINE MAURICE

Pending approval of the UMass Building Authority, work is expected to be starting soon on a solar energy project at the University-owned North Village Apartments on North Pleasant Street.

The project will test several different types of low-cost energy systems which can easily be installed in almost any home, and is expected to reduce heating costs fifteen to fifty percent, said Merrilee Harrigan, who proposed the project last fall.

Harrigan is an instructor in SUEDE (Solar Utilization-Economic Development and Employment), a federally-funded project at UMass which will be running the North Village Project.

In addition to the Cooperative extension service at UMass, SUEDE includes the Center of Ecological Technology in Pittsfield, Ma., and Southern New Hampshire Services in Goffstown, New Hampshire.

Under the SUEDE program, fifteen people from the area, whose needs fall under the Comprehensive Education and Training Act (CETA) have been trained in the construction of solar devices. They have been training for three months, and by November will have installed solar devices on forty-five low-income homes in Franklin and Hampshire counties.

The objective of the North Village Project, said Harrigan, is to "tie the University in with a positive experience about energy." The project was approved by the UMass Board of Trustees in June.

North Village was chosen as the best location for the project because it is the only set of buildings at the University that is not tied up to the central steam system, and thus had individual thermostats, which will facilitate monitoring the systems installed, Harrigan said.

North Village also provides the unique opportunity to put four different systems on identical buildings, she said.

Harrigan said the project will employ five apartments—four will be used to test different solar heating systems and the fifth will serve as a control. All of the apartments chosen have a southern exposure, she said.

North Village Apartments, where a new solar energy project will be installed this fall. (Photo by Ellen Davis)

The first system consists of attaching a solar greenhouse to the southern wall. Two vents are made in the wall: one at the bottom and one at the top. Hot air rises and passes through the top vent. This creates a vacuum within the greenhouse causing cool air to be drawn through the bottom vent. Then the vents are closed at night to prevent heat from circulating out of the house.

The second method involves mounting a solar collector on the southern wall. The collector has a metal absorber plate which heats air behind it and moves the air into the house using the same vent system found in the greenhouse.

The third method is perhaps the simplest of all, Harrigan said. It is merely the addition of glass windows on the southern wall accompanied by the use of an insulating shade. This shade is made of aluminized mylar and decreases heat loss when put down at night. Water tubes are placed behind part of the glass to prevent overheating and to store heatfor the night.

The fourth method involves the use of an active system. This system does not require a southern wall, and could be placed on the roof. It was designed by Jim Manwell, Paul Wendelglass, and Andy Nazar, graduate students in the alternative energy program of the UMass mechanical engineering department with the guidance of Jon McGowan.

This last active system is the only one which will preheat hot water as well as heat space, Harrigan said. However, the apartments will have to be rewired to monitor heat and hot water electrical consumption separately to ensure accuracy in reading results, she said.

Total cost to the University for the project will be $10,500-$4,500 for materials for the passive system, $4,000 for materials and labor to install the active system, and $2,000 to put meters into the five apartments.

Hopefully, data from the project will provide significant evidence of the cost-effectiveness of solar power, and will serve to increase the public's awareness of the potential applications of solar energy, Harrigan said.

Steinem urges student activism

By CAROL ROSENBERG

Feminist leader Gloria Steinem called for student leaders from around the nation to help redefine the politics of the country at a conference held at UMass in August.

"We have only just begun to make institutional changes," the Ms. magazine editor told the University students on August 17 in the Student Union Ballroom. "There is still the white male norm."

Steinem said the group was part of "creative troublemakers" across the country, including herself as a member.

The United Student Senate Association conference invited Steinem to address the theme of "Fighting Racism and Sexism and other forms of Discrimination." as part of their week-long conference held on campus for about 300 delegates from throughout the United States as well as Chile, Ireland, Israel, Panama, Poland, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union.

"Politics is any power relationship in our daily lives," said Steinem in calling for the redefinition

"When we look in our textbooks and they are so sadly lacking that we need black studies and womens studies, our education is sadly lacking." She described the special programs as "add-ons to our basic thrust."

The Washington-based organization, which boasts a 1.5 million membership, is the lobbying group for college and university students. The students met during the week to formulate a platform, attend workshops and lectures, and elect a national chair.

In redefining the political system, Steinem said the public need an awareness of the make-up of the present system.

"The sex-race caste system is fundamental to any political system," she said. And "wherever one finds women subjugated, there are races subjugated."

"There is no way the racial caste system can be overthrown without uprooting the men-women caste system as a whole."

She said one must have an understanding of the caste system into which society is divided before it may be changed.

"The root-cause of violence is the sexual caste system-which divides us into masculine-feminine, passive-aggressive sex roles," she said.

Steinem addressed her own university education, at Smith College in Northampton in the 1950s when there was "not one black student and there was not one black faculty member," and the catalogue prided itself on having four males for every one female faculty member.

"We were told if we were ever going to have intelligent children we have to have intelligent women and that's why we were there."

Steinem brought to the conference complementary copies of the September Ms. magazine their first issue geared toward a Back-to-College theme.

She mentioned the edition on several occasions, referring to an article of her own, "The Good News Is: These Are Not The Best Years of Your Life!" but made no note of a story originating at UMass "Both Feet in the Door: Campus Takeover 1970s Style," by former Collegian Women's Editor Julie Melrose.

The conference was also addressed by Howard Morland, author of the controversial Progressive Magazine story, "The H-Bomb Secret"; Bill Wynn of the United Food and Commercial Workers; Brodice Butler of the Moton Institute for Black students; Ray Rodgers of the National JP Stevens Boycott and Michael Harrington of the Democratic Socialist Party.

LIBRARY GUIDE

THE LIBRARY SYSTEM

The Library System consists of the 28-story University Library, several branch libraries and various reading rooms. The University Library houses most of the holdings in the social sciences and humanities. Principal branch libraries are:

Morrill Biological Sciences Library
On the 2nd floor of Morrill Science Center; contains biological and geological material.

Music Library
A non-circulating collection of thematic indexes, scores and recordings, housed in Room 149 of the Fine Arts Center.

Physical Sciences Library
On the 2nd floor of the Graduate Research Center; includes materials in engineering, chemistry, mathematics, water resources, computer science, food technology, wood technology, physics, astronomy, and related fields.

FIVE COLLEGE LIBRARIES

UMass students and faculty have direct borrowing privilegesat the main libraries of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges. Mateial thus borrowed may be returned directly, or to the University Library.

CATALOG INFORMATION

The card catalog on the main floor of the University Library lists almost all the holdings of all parts of the Library System, including branch libraries and reading rooms. It is divided into two sections:

Author and Title Catalog:
Contains cards for names of persons and agencies considered to be authors of publications. Most works also have title cards in this catalog; periodicals are listed here by title and also in the Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings.

Subject Catalog:
Contains cards indicating the subject areas of materials. To find the exact subject headings used, consult the Library of Congress Subject Headings on tables near the card catalog.

Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings:
Periodicals in the UMass system and in other major collections in the Valley are listed alphabetically here by title with locations, call numbers and volumes held.

The librarians at the Reference Desk will gladly provide assistance in using these catalogs and in locating other items, such as government publications and archival materials, which are not fully listed.

BORROWING MATERIALS

How to Borrow a Book
Identify the publication from the entry in the card catalog. Most materials are arranged according to the Library of Congress classification system. Note the call number, a unique combination of letters and numbers on the upper lefthand corner of the catalog card, and go directly to the stacks or the special locations or libraries indicated. Charts showing stack and special locations are posted near the card catalog.

In the University Library, present the book with your ID card at the Circulation Desk on the 1st floor. The 2nd floor Circulation Desk handles renewals and requests for books not on the shelves.

Loan Period
Books circulate for two weeks (four weeks for graduate students and faculty members). They may be renewed by mail (U.S. or campus), by phone (3-item limit per call), or in person at the library from which they were borrowed, unless they have been requested by another borrower. Periodicals do not circulate.

Recalls
Books are subject to recall after two weeks if requested by another reader, and at any time if needed for Reserve.

Reserve Books
Reserve materials circulate for time periods varying from two hours to several days. A photo ID is required to use these materials. They must be returned to the desk from which they were borrowed; in the University Library, to the Reserve Desk on the 2nd floor.

Book Returns
Books may be returned to the library from which they were borrowed or to the University Library. There are book deposit boxes near the main entrance and on the west side of the building: do not use these to return Reserve books or Interlibrary loans.

Computer Search Service
Inquire at the Reference Desk, main floor, or at the appropriate science library for an estimate of charges and information on computerized literature searches of bibliographic and information data bases in the sciences, social sciences, and humanities.

Government Documents
The Documents collection on the 21st floor houses official publications of the United States, United Nations and Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Most of these materials are not listed in the main card catalog, but are accessible through special indexes.

Instruction and Orientation
Course-related library sessions are conducted for graduate and undergradute classes, at the request of instructors. Tours of the library are given several times a day at the beginning of each semester, Wednesdays at 2:30 p.m., and by appointment. Inquire at the Reference Desk on the main floor.

Interlibrary Loan
Faculty and graduate students may apply at the Reference Desk, main floor, to obtain research materials not available in the University ofMassachusetts Library System. Undergraduates may use Interlibrary Loan service only formaterials within the Valley area.

Maps
A collection of approximately 100,000 sheet maps, geological and, topographic, demographic and historical, is in Room 269 of the Morrill Science Center.

Microforms
Microtext copies of newspapers, government archives, and many other types of research materials are in the Microforms Room on the main floor, along with reading and printing equipment.

Library tours

General tours of the University Library will be given three times a day in the first two weeks of the Fall semester, September 4-7 and 10-14. You are invited to join one of these guided tours, which will leave from the library entrance lobby at 10:30 AM, and 1:30 PM, and 2:30 PM. Each tour takes about 45 minutes and provides a good opportunity for you to become acquainted with the physical layout of the library and with its services.

During the rest of the academic year, tours are given each Wednesday at 2:30 PM, and at other times by appointment. To arrange a tour at another time or on another day, call the Reference Department at 5-0150.

Librarians at the Physical Sciences Library (2nd floor, Graduate Research Center) and at the Morrill Biological Sciences Library (Morrill 220) are also prepared to discuss their facilities with potential users.

Library to undergo renovation

By DAVID ALLEN

The University Library will be undergoing renovations this fall, in order to install a new book detection in the library, and also to correct inadequacies which currently exist in the lobby area.

The renovations are necessary because of the "unnecessary removal of library volumes," said Gordon Fretwell of the Library Director's Office.

Fretwell said it is nearly impossible to determine the yearly cost of books which are removed illegally. "The only way to determine the dollar amount in a precise manner is to inventory the entire collection on a yearly basis," he said.

"The last such inventory took three summer sessions and one intercession period," Fretwell said. The inventory was begun in 1973 and completed in 1976. "In an overall collection that totals over one million volumes, we deterined that between 16-17,000 volumes were missing," he said.

These losses extended over a 10-year period, so yearly estimates were adjusted accordingly. "On this basis we estimate that close to 2,000 volumes are lost each year," Fretwell added.

The average cost of replacing such volumes is approximately $20 each. "It will cost at least $10 to replace the volume, and another $8-10 will be consumed in staff time for processing and replacement," Fretwell pointed out. This cost also reduces funds which are available for new acquisitions, he added.

"On this basis we estimate that close to 2,000 volumes are lost each year."

The estimated price tag for the complete book detection renovation package is "in the area of $60-70,000," according to Fretwell. "This includes staff time, equipment, and supplies," he said.

Fretwell also pointed to certain "nonquantifiable costs" which the new book detection system will alleviate. "No one can tabulate the cost of the frustration encountered by people who must use the volumes which are missing," Fretwell said.

Among these frustrations are loss of research time and the inevitability "that people must do second-rate jobs, on assigned research topics, because of missing volumes," Fretwell said.

In a University community, these losses are sometime more damaging than the actual dollar amounts, Fretwell concluded.

"The new detection system will make it normally unnecessary to check each individual bag carried out of the library," said George Wright, Deputy Associate Director of Public Services.

Wright declined to release any specifics about the system, however, saying that "the fewer people who know how it operates, the better."

The contract for the new book detection system has been awarded to Knogo Inc. of New York, and two firms are still being considered for the renovation work to be done in conjunction with the new system.

The firms under consideration are Palazzesi Construction Corp. of Wilbraham, MA and Ciocca Construction Corp. of Springfield, according to William Scheumann, Design Engineer at the Physical Plant.

The contract will be awarded through the Attorney General's office, at which time the appropriate documents will be returned to the University for processing, said Richard MacDonald, Business Manager for the Library.

This processing work, by both the University and the successful bidder usually takes about a month, Scheumann said, but MacDonald is hopeful that work will begin soon.

Library officials had originally hoped that the work would be completed over the summer.

The bidders have asked for a period of 120 days to complete the necessary renovation work, but MacDonald said that this time constraint does not mean that the work will necessarily extend to the full 120-day period.

"There may be a few days of inconvenience when we have to close off the front entrance and re-route traffic through the side entrance," Wright said.

New alcohol policies in effect

By CAROL ROSENBERG

When Governor Edward J. King signed into law a drinking age of 20 on April 16, 1979, a multitude of rules became enacted, on both state and campus levels, affecting 56 percent of students living on campus at that time.

Those laws and policies will affect even a greater percentage of UMass students this semester.

Along with the state law came provisions for enforcement and specifications for what would be accepted identification.

UMass Police Chief Robert G. Joyce outlined what would be acceptable for the campus at that time.

And on the administration front, a subcommittee of a campus task force released guidelines for drinking on campus which was followed shortly thereafter by guidelines for alcohol use at dormitory parties.

According to the law, the only form of identification of age considered acceptable is a Massachusetts Drivers license or a Liquor Purchase Card. The Liqour Purchase Card may be purchased for $5 at The Department of Motor Vehicles upon presentation of an approved application, signed by the local police chief.

At that time, Joyce said the Top of The Campus validation sticker and out-of-state drivers licenses would not be considered valid identification for admittance to campus bars — The Top of The Campus Lounge and The Blue Wall in the Campus Center.

The Campus rules, drawn up by student and administrative members of the subcommittee on alcohol of the Vice Chancellor's Task Force on Violence expanded upon the law and made additional rules effecting on campus residents.

Package store deliveries to campus dormitories, one-day liquor licenses to fraternities and dormitories and general liquor license for outdoor campus events were generally banned under the new provisions.

The provisions also warned that selling alcoholic beverages in student rooms would "in all probability present a major temptation to some individuals." Dean of Students William F. Field said, at that time, the sale of alcohol in dormitories is illegal.

Additional rules formulated by The Community Development Center — the office which governs over dormitory life — were created to go "hand in hand" with the task force's policies, a spokesperson from the office said in April.

The rules, created for dormitory parties, provides for alcohol consumption at parties for legal drinkers and place responsibility for the actions at the parties on the students who initiate the party and sign a party contract.

A section of the contract provides: "Violation of the Commonwealth law may lead to the termination of the event by either a university staff member and-or the police."

According to the law, any person under 20 years of age who possesses alcohol may be fined not more than $50. If a person under 20 is found operating a motor vehicle while possessing alcohol, the driver's license may be suspended by the court for "not more than three months."

A legal exception in the law states a person over 20 may purchase liquor for a spouse, child, or ward of the buyer, if they are under age, but adds the purchaser must accompany that person if it is being transported.

Also according to the law, a person who is found possessing a false identification card "shall be punished by a fine of $300."

The law also states a legal drinker who buys alcohol for a person under 20 years of age who is not their child, ward spouse will be subject to a $200 fine and-or six months imprisonment.

Alcohol workshops sponsored

The UMass Alcohol Education Project sponsors a variety of workshops, displays and projects to aid students in assessing their use of alcohol, an official with the project said.

"We try to promote responsible decisions for alcohol use," Debbie Edelman a full-time staffer with the project said. "We try to teach people how to say 'no.'"

The project, which is associated with the UMass Mental Health Services offers workshops on party planning, sex role and alcohol, values and alcohol, and stress, among others.

The program is geared towards different segments of the population, through students who act as peer educators, she said. The groups include, blacks, gays, third world persons, fraternity and sorority members and married students.

Edelman said the project reports "four percent of UMass students have an alcohol problem. This means alcohol interferes with their lives, meaning school, whatever."

She also said about the projects statistics report about 13 percent of crimes handled by UMass police were alcohol related.

New service aids graduate students in getting funding

The Office of Research Affairs in the Graduate School has announced the establishment of a new Graduate Student Grants Service. "GSGS" is designed as a coordinating center for graduate students seeking independent funding for study and research activities. GSGS will respond to graduate student initiative and assist self-help activities on the part of graduate student associations and individuals in departments that wish to maintain files on potential funding sources, hold workshops on grantsmanship techniques for graduate students and otherwise promote the ability of UMass graduate students to compete for grants and fellowships.

If you are a graduate student interested in finding out about student funding opportunities in your field, first check in your department to see if your graduate student association has a committee responsible for collecting and posting grant information. The GSGS coordinator, Marilyn McArthur, a graduate student in Anthropology, will work with these committees to help assemble appropriate files. If your department does not yet have established channels for identifying funding opportunities for students, contact the GSGS coordinator for assistance.

The success of the GSGS network will depend on the cooperative efforts of graduate students within and between the disciplines, as in-coming information about grant possibilities is circulated and shared.

Graduate Students who are interested in the whole range of grants available to faculty and students on the campus may subscribe to Research News, a monthly bulletin of granting opportunities published by the Office of Research Affairs. Beginning with the September issue, Research News will publish a list of "Graduate Student Announcements" of those grants and fellowships presently open to graduate students especially. Many, but not all, of these are for doctoral dissertation projects. A subscription to Research News is free; extra copies should also be on file in departments.

Graduate Students are encouraged to act now. Deadlines for funding for next year (Fall '80) are coming up now. Contact the GSGS Coordinator, Marilyn McArthur in RM A229 Graduate Research Center, tel. 545-0666.

New chancellor to emphasize

A letter from the chancellor

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
AMHERST • BOSTON • WORCESTER

OFFICE OF THE CHANCELLOR
WHITMORE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING
AMHERST, MASSACHUSETTS 01003

August 17, 1979

It is not often, on any campus, that a "freshman" has the opportunity to greet the whole student body. As a newcomer I take unusual pleasure in saying "Welcome" to undergraduate and graduate students alike.

Like you I was attracted to the Amherst campus by its fine reputation as an institution which has risen rapidly to the leading ranks of the nation's universities. To my fellow freshmen, in particular, I can report that my first few weeks on campus have confirmed for me the high quality of the faculty, staff and students you will be meeting. You will find the University a stimulating place to live.

Good fortune to you all, in your studies and in your lives, over the coming year.

Henry Koffler
Chancellor

HK/jt

By ELLEN DAVIS

Chancellor Henry Koffler says he can relate to students who are at UMass for the first time this fall because he too is a freshman.

Koffler, 56, replaced Randolph W. Bromery as chancellor at the beginning of August. Bromery resigned after eight years as chancellor to return to teaching geology at UMass.

As chancellor, Koffler's responsibilities include representing the campus to the UMass President and Board of Trustees, overseeing expenditures, and appointing vice-chancellors and deans.

Good first impressions

After one week in office, Koffler said he had a very good impression of the University. "It's been very enjoyable," he said. "The people here are of much higher quality than they themselves realize."

Koffler, who left a job at the University of Minnesota to come to UMass, says the high quality of the people here was one of the most important attractions for him.

"The people here are of much higher quality than they themselves realize."

The new chancellor, who also has a doctorate in microbiology, says he was also attracted to the University because of the fact that it was a land-grant college. Koffler has a very strong commitment to public education in general, and feels that society has not developed any other organization that can do better in the areas of fostering discovery and inquiry, developing human potential and talent, and extending learning to solve problems society faces.

"UMass specifically has done a remarkable job late in the game to develop these," he says.

The new chancellor spent his first weeks in office getting what he called a "cram course on the University," starting with academics. During this time, he had daily meetings with deans and faculty members of all the different colleges within the University.

Priorities as chancellor

Although they were only brief reviews, Koffler called these meetings the beginning of a more serious planning effort for the University, which is one of his priorities as chancellor. "We must take planning much more seriously than has been done in the past," Koffler said.

Koffler also says the University has to be more cautious in its internal funding.

Other priorities the new chancellor has include expanding the University's public outreach, helping to build constituency support, continuing the development of quality at the University, and creating a more supportive environment for students, faculty, and staff.

"We need greater emphasis on scholarship, research and outreach," Koffler said, "The main purpose of the University is discovery, learning and public service."

Koffler feels outreach is particularly important because "The commonwealth doesn't fully understand what the University is doing. I think it is doing impressive things, and we have to make this known."

"We have to work harder to be accessable to a broad audience," he said.

scholarship, research, outreach

Koffler said one of his major jobs will also be to serve as a unifying force for the University. This will involve emphasizing the positive in the institution and trying to convey to individuals a sense of belonging, identification, and common purpose, he said.

"People should come to the limit of what they can do," he said. "When students leave here, they should be better than when they came."

Koffler said he will probably have some special projects he will work on for the University also, but it is too early to say specifically.

Informal style

As for his style, Koffler describes himself as a "very adaptable man," and a "rational decision-maker with an informal style," who likes to make decisions based on data.

Koffler also says he believes in delegation of responsibility and lines of responsibility. "If the chancellor starts doing other people's jobs, he soon will be incapable of doing the job he is supposed to," he said.

Quality important

Koffler says his most important attribute is the sense of quality he has. For both students and administrators, Koffler says he feels quality is very important.

"People should come to the limit of what they can do," he said. "When students leave here, they should be better than when they came."

Students should transmit a "vision of quality" to the Commonwealth and the rest of the country, Koffler said.

Budget tight

Commenting on the University's $84.7 million budget for 1980, Koffler said, "It's very tight. We won't find it as easy to function under it as we should be able to." Koffler said he was especially concerned about the tight budget for supplies. "Inflation has eroded the purchasing power of the budget very significantly," he said. "This can only have a negative effect on the quality of education."

Koffler said he will be quite active in establishing relationships with private, state and federal sources to get the University additional money.

THE FIRST CALCULATOR SMART ENOUGH TO SPEAK YOUR LANGUAGE.

The 5100 speaks to chemistry majors.
The 5100 speaks to mathematics majors.
The 5100 speaks to engineering majors.
The 5100 speaks to physics majors.

THE SHARP 5100

The amazing new Sharp 5100 is quite possibly the most important thing that's happened to calculators since calculators happened to math.

Here, at last, is a scientific calculator with direct formula entry, in algebraic terms. Even the most complex formulas can be entered and displayed just as they are written. Furthermore, your original entries can be visually edited, corrected, or tested. Which means there's no need for machine-language encoding or decoding. Result: you save valuable time, and avoid the frustrating errors that might have slipped by you before.

And the incredible 5100 offers you a 24-character dot-matrix display that rolls right or left to accommodate one or more formulas totaling up to 80 steps. Store the formulas; when you need any segment, instant playback is at your fingertips. Incidentally, Sharp's own Safe Guard™ feature protects all entered formulas and stored data, even when the calculator is off. Corrections, insertions, or deletions? Make them quickly and precisely, when and where you want, at any point in the calculation.

The 5100 makes the job of assimilating, studying, and problem-solving a lot easier for you. You skip past the drudgery of wasted time. You enjoy the convenience of a classroom tool that operates as fast as a professor can talk. And the 1,000-hour battery life could very well take you all the way through college.

Most importantly, the Sharp 5100 is smart enough to talk to you directly, and on your own terms.

And in your case, that's a major advantage.

Ask for a demonstration today at your college store.

Office of Internships says many places seeking interns

By ELLEN DAVIS

The Office of Internships, located in Room 16 of the Curry Hicks Building, is now encouraging qualified undergraduates to apply for spring 1980 internships.

Although it may be hard to believe, there are more agencies requesting interns than there are students seeking internships, according to Internship Coordinator Ellen Wolf.

This semester, the office has over 700 agencies interested in student interns, Wolf said.

Internships aren't just in student teaching or nursing any more either, Wolf said. "Students from all disciplines are welcome to apply," she said. "There isn't a major on campus we haven't placed."

Last year, the office placed over 500 students with internships, Wolf said.

Places students did internships at included newspapers, national parks, congressional offices, court systems, zoos, museums, hospitals, small businesses, and TV studios, Wolf said, but added that "The list could go on forever."

According to Wolf, almost anywhere students want to go, they can probably work out a placement. Most internships are in the northeast corridor, from Maine to Washington, D.C. however, she said.

Wolf said the search for an internship is very similar to a job search, so students are advised to start planning early if they are interested. The deadline for applying for a spring internship is Friday, Nov. 16, she said.

Wolf also emphasized that internships are considered an extension of classroom work, and should not be done "just to get away from school."

For students who completed internships during the spring or summer of 1979, the Office of Internships is holding a celebration in Memorial Hall on Sept. 13 from 4 to 6 p.m. Interns, their faculty sponsors, and all interested students and faculty are invited to attend.

Referral fair set for Sept. 11

By DAVID ALLEN

The tables which normally fill the Campus Center Concourse area will have a unique purpose on Tuesday, September 11, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Rather than the usual clatter of vendors hawking their wares,students who pass through the Campus Center will be participants in the annual Referral Fair Information Day.

"The Referral Fair is a collaborative effort by the Resource Network, The Information Data Bank, the Campus Center's Board of Governors and the Student Activities Office," said Judy Davis of the Resource Network.

"The purpose of the fair is to make a large amount of information available to all segments of the University community," said Ron Corriveau of the IDB.

Various academic departments, counseling services, student-run businesses, and student organizations will staff tables which will be located on the Campus Center Concourse, Levels I and II, Corriveau said.

Among the organizations which will take part in this year's fair are WMUA, the Office of Internships, the Community Development Center, the Mental Health Department, academic departments and studen-run businesses such as the co-ops.

"A lot of people simply do not know what types of services are available to them," Corriveau said. "There is a lot going on here and we are attempting to establish one place where all types of information will be made available," he said.

The Referral Fair originally began in 1974, as a project of the Resource Network. The information was aimed at University staff members, such as Heads of Residence and Resident Assistants, in order to "render staff members knowledgeable about services and resources which are offered to the University community," Davis said.

The trained personnel would then be able to "refer students to the appropriate department or office for the information which they desired," Davis explained.

"A lot of people simply don't know what types of services are available to them," Corriveau said. "There is a lot going on here and we are attempting to establish one place where all types of information will be available."

The fair has grown to such an extent over the past four years that it has been moved from one room in the Campus Center, to the Student Union Ballroom, and finally to the Campus Center Concourse levels, for the 1979-80 academic year, Davis said.

Campus Center administrators estimate that approximately 10,000 people pass through the Campus Center daily. It is this large percentage of the University community which the sponsoring organizations wish to attract.

Some interestig activities are planned for this year's Referral Fair, "enhancing the fair-like quality of the event," Davis pointed out.

Both WMUA and WFCR intend to broadcast live interviews, as well as regular programming, from "on the scene," Corriveau said.

The co-ops have been assigned to the Campus Center Auditorium and will conduct a "cross between a sidewalk sale and a demonstration of what types of scrvices and products which they offer," Corriveau said.

The Peoples' Market, Earth Foods, the UMass Outing Club and the Sporting Goods Co-op, among others, will have displays set up to familiarize members of the University community with the specific services which are available to them, Corriveau added.

"The Union Video Center is also planning to erect a seven-foot screen at the top of the escalators, to monitor goings-on at the fair and to carry special programs, such as rock concerts, throughout the day," Corriveau said.

The UMass Transit Service will station a bus near one of the Campus Center entrances "to provide new students with bus schedules and to familiarize them with what the bus system is all about," Corriveau added.

"We can't think of any better way to put all of this information out," Corriveau said. "Depending on how this year's Referral Fair turns out, we'd like to continue it on an annual basis," he added.

The sponsoring organizations are actively encouraging input about the success of the fair, as well as suggestions as to how it may be improved, Corriveau said.

Any campus organization which has not been contacted, and wishes to become involved in the Referral Fair is encouraged to contact Corriveau in the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore. RSO groups should contact Mary Wardwell in the Student Activities Office, Student Union Building.

New theaters saturate local movie market

By ROD CARVETH

A pleasant surprise awaits those movie buffs who have been away from Amherst this summer: 12 new theaters—eight at the new Holyoke Mall, and four at the Hampshire Mall. This increase raises to 31 the number of screens (discounting drive-ins) now serving the area from Springfield to Amherst.

While this influx of new theaters may appear to oversaturate the surrounding movie market, theater owners in the area feel relatively confident that, while there will be some impact on the local picture business, each will survive. In interviews with some of the theater managers, however, there was unanimous agreement that only time would tell what the ultimate outcome will be.

The fiercest economic competition in the local movie business falls between the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield, the new Holyoke Cinemas, and the eight American Multi Cinema screens at the two Hadley malls.

With the addition of the four new theaters at the Hampshire Mall, the AMC theater chain is hoping that film distributors will consider Northampton-Hadley-Amherst a first-run market on its own, separate from Springfield. That way, according to Hampshire Theater manager Dale Oglesbay, the eight screens will be able to play "day and date" (opening on the same day) with the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. So far, Disney, Paramount, and Columbia have agreed to treat the Hadley malls theaters as a separate first-run market, and negotiations are underway with several of the other major film companies, Oglesbay said.

Oglesbay noted that while the almost two-month delay in opening the theaters will mean that it may be well into next year before the new theaters at the Hampshire Mall are established—as bidding for films takes place months in advance—the three major theater groups have "large corporate backing" and are prepared for some "keen competition." For example, a week before the August 10 Grand Opening, the Hampshire Four Theaters, in conjunction with WACKY radio, held a "Hollywood Comes to the Hampshire Mall" promotion.

This attraction, common to many AMC theater openings, included a contest for the best movie-oriented costume, with the first prize being a trip to Canada. In addition, a "VIP" screening was held for the local merchants, town officials and media representatives, and came complete with "ribbon" cutting (the "ribbon" being an oversized reel of film), and wine and cheese.

One possible consequence of the intensified competition in the area, Oglesbay observed, is that films may stay longer as theaters may have to come up with guarantee money in order to obtain feature films. The movies will then have to play longer for the theaters to recoup their investment. While Oglesbay was confident the AMC theaters would survive by playing to the nearby college-oriented market, he saw the Ingleside theaters being in a vulnerable position by going head-to-head with the more-established theaters in West Springfield.

Oglesbay also predicted that because of the nature of the movies they play that the Amherst Cinema and Pleasant Street Theatre might emerge unscathed economically, but he foresaw troubles ahead for the Calvin and the Academy of Music in Northampton.

Holyoke Cinemas manager Ken McClintock had a much different opinion than Oglesbay had regarding what the impact would be on the Holyoke theaters. When asked what affect the opening of the four new Hadley theaters would be McClintock replied "We'll steal more people from his (Oglesbay's) market than he'll steal from mine."

McClintock reported that since the opening in the beginning of July, business at the Mall theaters was "doing very well," and was bolstered even further by the arrival of the popular Muppet Movie, which was playing at two of the eight screens. McClintock pointed out that the Holyoke Cinemas, which are owned by the Boston-based Theater Management Services, Inc., will be offering more diversity in their films than either the Hadley AMC theaters, or the Showcase Cinemas. For example, September films will include the feature The Seduction of Joe Tynan starring Alan Alda; Rust Never Sleeps, a rock fantasy with Neil Young; and Le Cage Aux Folles and Slave of Love, two foreign films.

Though McClintock saw the Holyoke Cinemas at a competitive disadvantage with the more established West Springfield theaters, he was confident that his theaters would hold their own. Like Oglesbay, McClintock described the Northampton theaters as being in a more precarious state economically, particularly the Academy of Music.

"Time will tell" was Redstone Theater promotional manager Gary Goldstein's response when asked how the new theater openings would affect Redstone's Showcase Cinema outlet in West Springfield. Goldstein saw movies as being more difficult to obtain, due to competitive pressures, but was confident, that with the fine reputation of the Showcase Cinemas, that the movie theaters there would continue to do well.

Manager Russ Durocher of the Calvin Theater also observed that motion pictures would be more difficult to get, especially for the Calvin which exists as a "second-run" outlet—playing feature films after their run in larger markets. Durocher felt that the Calvin could cope economically, however, by maintaining their bargain policies, offering $2 movies and dollar-nights. In addition, Calvin assistant manager Nancy Nicewicz said that the Calvin Theater is an attraction in itself, drawing in as many "theater lovers" as moviegoers.

As noted by those interviewed, only time will tell what the final outcome will be for the theaters in the area, as the competitive battlelines are just now being drawn. For the time being, the area has more screens—and more movies—to enjoy than ever before.

Thirld World Theater, Ellington Music Series being offered this fall

By ELLEN DAVIS

Two new fine arts series, which will hopefully become regular features, are being offered this fall by the Student Activities Office—A Duke Ellington Music Series and a Third World Theater Series.

The music series, which is tied into the Campaign to Combat Racism's drive to name the Fine Arts Center for Duke Ellington, will feature one major concert a month

The four concerts this fall are the Jackie McLean Quartet on Sept. 29 in the Campus Center Auditorium, Santa Maria, on Oct. 29 in the Student Union Building, The World Saxophone Quartet on Nov. 14 in the Campus Center Auditorium, and Beaver Harris-Don Pullen and 360 Degrees on Dec. 7 in the Student Union Ballroom.

All the concerts will begin at 8 p.m. No prices for the series have been determined yet.

The theater series will bring four plays to UMass, three done by professional theater companies from New York City and one by a young local playwright.

The first play in the series is "Homeland" by the Modern Times Theater. The play is a comedy which focuses on the experience of a black South African woman who works for a Ford Motor Co. executive. This play will be on Oct. 14 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The second play in the series is "prisms" by Mascheri Chapple, a student at Smith College. This play, which adapts the letters and poems of a black inmate in a Florida state penitentiary, was performed as a workshop at UMass during the summer. It is being rewritten and will be presented as part of the series on Oct. 25, 26, and 27 and Nov. 1, 2, and 3 at 8 p.m. in Hampden Center for the performing Arts.

The third play in the series is "And the Soul Shall Dance," which is written by a Japanese-American playwright and performed by the Pan-Asian Repertoiry, the only professional Asian-American repertory group in New York City. This play, which details the life of immigrant Japanese in the United States before WWII, has been widely acclaimed on the East and West coasts, and was also made into a movie for public television. The play will be presented on Nov. 30 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The last play in the series is "Simpson Street," a contemporary Puerto Rican-American drama which takes place in New York. The play, which is performed by the Puerto Rican Traveling Theater of New York, will be on Dec. 10 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Tickets for the series, which are now on sale at the Student Activities Office and TIX are $5 for students and $8 for non-students.

Tickets for individual plays are $2 for students and $3 for non-students and will be available at the door. Purchase of individual tickets can be applied later to a series ticket.

A scene from Modern Times Theater's Homeland, a domestic comedy about South Africa and the USA by Steve Friedman and Selaelo Maredi. The play will be the first of four in a Third World Theater series premiering at UMass this fall. Also being held for the first time this fall is a Duke Ellington music series. Both new series are sponsored by the Student Activities office.

In addition to the four plays, a film entitled "History of the Black Theater Movement from Raisin in the Sun to Colored Girls," will be shown prior to the series, on Sept. 21 in the Campus Center Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. The film has rare footage from various plays, according to Roberta Uno, a program specialist in the Student Activities Office who has been working on the series since June.

★ New series

Uno said she developed the concept for the series after talking to third world playwrights who were frustrated with theater departments in the area because they had no parts for them to audition for.

"Theater has traditionally been EuroCentric, especially college theater," Uno said.

Uno said that by spring she hopes to have two local playwrights and two outside companies for the series.

Besides encouraging local third world playwrights, the series is also designed to give white people broader exposure to theater, Uno said. "We want everyone to be exposed to these types of companies," she said. Uno said the plays are also a good way to show the cultural expression of third world people.

The series is also unique in that it is being tied into academic work. Two courses are being offered in conjunction with the series, Uno said. The first, a one-credit Southwest course, is designed to give people going into theater broader exposure to different ideas. Students taking this course will attend four workshops given by the playwrights in addition to the four plays.

The second course is a three-credit course cross-listed with the Afro-American Studies department entitled "An Introduction to Third World Theater: History and Production." Students in this course will receive basic theater arts training, attend workshops with visiting professionals and develop their own material, Uno said.

The series also represents a big co-operative effort between the University and Third World theater companies. "It's no easy thing to drag a company up to Amherst and set up a show," Uno said.

Uno said she was able to get the theater companies to come to UMass because many of them are subsidized, and also because the companies are excited about performing for students and encouraging them to go into theater seriously.

While they are here, members of the companies will stay with people in the area, Uno said.

Bloodline - You're better off with the book

By DEBRA ROTH

Sidney Sheldon, author of four dynamic mysteries including Bloodline, would be better off if he'd be satisfied with the profits from his bestsellers and forget about selling rights to his novels to moviemakers. His classic, The Other Side Of Midnight, was a film flop. And Bloodline, although an exciting fast-reading story, is a torturous bore on screen.

Bloodline is about a fictional pharmeceutical company heiress, Elizabeth Roffe (Audrey Hepburn), and her struggle to maintain the multi-million dollar corporation. Her partners—three cousins and their spouses—are eager to sell out now that the company president—Elizabeth's father and the sole objector to their plans—is dead. Even her best friend and father's advisor agrees because of pressure from nervous lenders who haven't faith in an inexperienced woman president. But Elizabeth refuses because her father was adament that the company remain family-owned and when she makes her announcement, the pressure starts getting more abusive than board meeting arguments—sabotage and murder attempts.

Although Elizabeth's cousins are in the money, they're each in a pinch for quick big cash. Her Italian cousin, Ivo Palazzi (Omar Sharif), is being blackmailed by his mistress; her English cousin, Sir Alec Nichols (James Mason), is ducking loan sharks who feed his wife's gambling addiction; and her French cousin, Charles Martel. (Maurice Ronet), went bankrupt on a vineyard investment that he kept secret from his domineering Roffe wife. Each of these desperate mongruels as well as her secretive friend Reese Williams (Ben Gazzara) are suspected of being Elizabeth's assailant by a private detective and his assistants—ten computers.

The verbal-communicating-computers are the most lively characters in Bloodline aside from Ivo, a comical Don Juan played superbly by the usually dramatic Sharif. The other characters however, are colorless. Mason and Gazzara's talents are wasted. And Hepburn plays a dull and callous woman. Most disappointing though is Reese and Elizabeth's bland and businesslike relationship even after they fall in love. Elizabeth's one-time confession of her feelings to Reese is so sudden that it sounds as though she's lying. Even the loveable computers were capable of better verse.

The sticky screenplay is by Laird Koenig whose entire effort is a sloppy adaption of the novel.

Bloodline does deserve credit though in keeping Sheldon's Elizabeth a competent businesswoman even though she is young and inexperienced. And a crafted psychedelic-looking montage of machines swiftly bottling and capping while Elizabeth tours that section of a plant deserves mention. The accompanying lively music for that sequence is an appropriate analogy for assembly line movement.

But Director Terence Young can't satisfy viewers with only a few worthwhile moments in a two-hour film. Viewers who have read the book will find a couple of good characters and important sequences ommitted. And the raison d'etre of the mystery is almost destroyed by poor editing which makes the story-line confusing and insufficient explanation of character motivation. For me the best part about Bloodline was when Elizabeth arrived at the place where I knew the final scene would begin.

Rocky's sequel a winner despite the manipulation

By JANET HALPIN

I'd read all the reviews—the ones that said Rocky II was just Sylvester Stallone's love story to himself—and went to the movie with a critical eye. It didn't work—I loved it.

Alright, there is a problem. Stallone is inall the scenes, and the film tries too hard to show what a great guy Rocky is (we already know that!); but the film gives you the same feeling Rocky I did—that the little guy can make it.

In this film, Rocky starts out pretty happy. He has just gotten married, bought a house, a car, and has settled comfortably into the American dream. But then things start to go wrong—money gets tight, his eye, nearly blinded in the last fight, prevents him from continuing his boxing career.

Along comes his chance, the rematch with Apollo Creed, and Rocky feels he has to accept, that if he fights one last time his life will be great once more, his pride will remain unbruised.

But still there are problems: his wife doesn't want him to fight, he feels guilty so he isn't training right. And then Adrianne nearly dies in childbirth. If we didn't feel sorry for Rocky before, we do now, so when Adrianne, after a quick recovery, finally gives her consent to the fight we are ready to cheer Rocky on.

Who wins the fight I won't tell, but it comes as a surprise, and after many tense moments, I still have my roommate's fingernail marks in my arm.

The film manipulates you, practically wrenching emotion out of you with each scene—Rocky sitting by his wife's bedside after she has slipped into a coma, Mickey sitting with Rocky in the chapel, Rocky praying just before his fight. But the film is so likeable you don't really mind the manipulation.

The producers of the film were wise to choose such a safe formula—the story of Rocky I with a few minor changes. Combine that with good professional performances (Burgess Meredith was superb), add a genuinely exciting fight scene and you come up with a thoroughly enjoyable film.

Questioning the objectivity of scientific research

From Genesis to Genocide-the Meaning of Human Nature and the Power of Behavioral Control* by Stephan L. Chorover, MIT Press

By EILEEN FOLEY

One has to be suspicious of titles which promise as much as this one, especially when the author sets out, as does Chorever, to debunk a sizeable body of scientific research, but in this case skepticism works in the author's favor.

Genesis to Genocide explores the manner in which culturaliy biased standards masquerade as scientifically determined fact, and how these "facts" work to preserve the privileged status of those with the power to set such standards. While Chorover's premise is not entirely original, he makes a strong and thought provoking case against the "objectivity" of scientific research, and neatly disembowels a number of other sacred cows in the process.

Chorover approaches the mass murders in Nazi Germany, the most flagrant case of genocide in modern history, not as a cultural anomaly but as the natural outgrowth of government sponsored eugenics programs pioneered in this country. As early as 1914, elements of the Americn scientific community had drafted a "segregation and sterilization program," parts of which became law, providing for the systematic elimination of "defective and antisocial varieties" estimated to total ten percent of the population.

In addition to sterilization, Chorover sees "intelligence" testing, drug use, psychosurgery, and psychotechnology as instruments of human oppression passed off as scientific solutions by those who see conformity as the only synonym for harmony in our society.

Theories linking violent behavior to brain dysfunction, though scientific evidence for such a connection is at best flimsy, are used as justification for the use of institutionalized mental patients and criminals as guineau-pigs in behavior modification experiments. Chorover cites example after example in which, even if the desired degree of passivity is induced, the individual loses the ability to cope outside of an institutional setting. He also notes that the victims of such theorizing are overwhelming those who are economically disadvantaged and racially in the minority.

At the core of Chorover's argument lies the realization that as long as the myth of scientific objectivity stands unchallenged, as long as the scientific community refuses to come to grips with its own cultural and social biases, "science" runs the very real risk of becoming, once again, the expediting arm of a social system which deems it necessary to dispose of the "life devoid of value," the undesirable, the disadvantaged, and the merely different.

A look at New York Theater

Journey to the Center of the Theater* by Walter Kerr, Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. $12.95

By CANDY CARLON

Despite its trite billing, Journey to the Center of the Theater is a marvelous collection of essays by New York Times theater reviewer Walter Kerr. The book provides a fairly comprehensive look at the New York theater in the past decade. In a veritable name-droppers paradise, Kerr focuses primarily on the personalities of the stage.

He advises Richard Burton to avoid film and remain on the stage; gushes over Ethel Merman and Mary Matin's benefit performance for New York city museum, berates Jason Robard for a plastic performance in Jose Quintero's production of "A Touch of a Poet."

Katherine Hepburn is the subject of two pieces, one a retrospective on the earliest of her films, the other looks at her 1976 Broadway appearance in Enid Bagnold's "A Matter of Gravity." Julie Harris, Colleen Dewherst, Maggie Smith and Carol Channing are also among the legends and near-legends discussed.

It is clear that although he is a reviewer, Kerr is a supporter of theater—willing to analyze, but not quick to criticize, any theatrical endeavor. There is, in this book, a healthy adoration of the growth of this decade's Broadway and off-Broadway productions.

He refers to Broadway as the showcase of american regional theater and discusses how this showcasing has united the fragmented audience of the 1960's. Kerr says in the introduction, "The audience hadn't come back to see what Broadway was doing, it had come back to show Broadway what it had been doing during the years of diaspora."

Indeed, Kerr himself is one of the most enthralled and energetic members of the audience. In Journey to the Center of the Theater he too is showcasing the New York theater he understands and loves.

More rock this fall than in a long time

By PERRY ADLER

As the school year begins and the stagnant Seventies draw to a close, there is more rock'n'roll in the record charts than in a long time.

The summer of '79 saw breakthroughs for such new artists as Joe Jackson, Bram Tchaikovsky, Sniff 'n' the Tears, and Flash and the Pan; continued success for the Cars; a comeback for Ian Hunter and the continuing rejuvenation of the Kinks; and more airplay than ever before for Graham Parker, Rockpile and Rachel Sweet. As I write, the Knack (an arrogant, sexist and overhyped group, but with a great 45) have the No. 1 album and No. 2 single; Patti Smith's "Frederick" has finally entered the singles charts; Talking Heads, who almost made it with their last record, have just released a new one; and, perhaps most encouragingly, "Pop Music" by M, from the weirder end of the New Wave spectrum, is becoming an immediate Top 40 hit!

These developments are surprising. After witnessing nearly all real rock'n'roll stiff in the last couple of years, many critics and fans were giving up hope. But a few courageous (and often desperate) radio stations around

Have YOU Considered Courses in Asian Studies?

China is opening up. What does this mean to the United States? To Taiwan? Japan is one of the top economic leaders in the world today. WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT EAST ASIA?

If you know little or nothing about East Asia, you owe it to yourself to learn something about the other half of the world which contains ¼ of the world's population.

Several of our beginning language courses and introductory courses taught in ENGLISH are still open!

We are the only department in a public institution in all of New England to offer the B.A. in Chinese and Japanese (Language, Literature, and Linguistics)!! We also offer the Asian Studies Certificate (a supplement to any other major in the University and Five-College system.) Students majoring in the Natural Sciences, Business, Education and Human Services benefit by and are especially encouraged to look into this.

PLEASE COME AND SEE US

the country took a gamble that there was an audience who would respond to something other than Chic or Journey. The gamble is paying off and spreading.

The situation is far from ideal, however. Much of the music making it is enjoyable but basically second-string "power pop," sometimes selling entire albums on the basis of only one or two great cuts. More intriguing, oddball stuff from people like Lene Lovich, Ian Dury, and the B-52's is having a rougher go of it (though they can be heard on the more progressive stations). And some of the bigger New Wave successes are becoming a bit annoying (Cheap Trick springs immediately to mind, for seeming as much a marketing phenomenon as Kiss; and if I hear "Rat Trap" or "Roxanne" once more, I'll scream).

Worst is the continued blackout of the most intense, hardest-rocking music. The Ramones movie, Rock 'n' Roll High School, has not (yet?) become the next Saturday Night Fever; its staggered openings (just now arriving on the East Coast) failed to generate the hoped-for momentum, and it's probably too dumb to spread beyond a cult audience. Maybe the forthcoming collaboration with legendary producer Phil Spector will finally put America's greatest rock'n'roll band over the top.

Meanwhile, England's (and possibly the world's) greatest band, the Clash, has at last released a compendium of their amazing imports in this country, but so far radio and retail response has been minimal. Their hope lies in building an audience through their upcoming tour. And the Grand Old Man of the American New Wave, David Johansen, has a new album out that may be more commercial than his earlier work, but I'm not holding my breath. If these people were given a chance to catch on, it could open the doors for literally hundreds of deserving artists, from relatively big names, like Iggy Pop and Tom Verlaine, to newer artists unfairly lost in the shuffle, like the Bizarros and the Reds.

Things are changing, if not as fast as desirable. The airplay given to the Records' "Starry Eyes" is proof: the song is a blatant (and inferior) copy of Eddie and the Hot Rods' classic "Do Anything You Wanna Do," which no one would touch a year-and-a-half ago. There's even a glimmer of hope in R&B: Bonnie Pointer's "Heaven Must Have Sent You" has a disco version on one side, but it's the side done in classic Motown style that they're playing on the radio. A great idea was stumbled onto here; release disco records with a normal side, too, giving the disco diehards their necessary thump-thump fix and the rest of us a break (including the artists, who may want to do something else with their songs but feel they can't for commercial reasons).

Let's hope that these positive changes continue, and in the meantime, if you like the new music you're hearing on commercial rock stations, be assured it's only the tip of the iceberg; you can hear the rest on the fine noncommercial stations in the area, like UMass's own WMUA (91.1 FM).

Heartbreakers, Ramones top list of fall albums

"We-e-ell, I'm goin' out-a west where I a-belong
Whe-e-ere the days are short and the nights are long
Well they walk
And I walk
They twist

Well they're out there havin' fun

By PHILIP MILSTEIN

Heartbreakers Live at Max's Kansas City—Every Heartbreakers gig is billed as their last. They may very well blow out for good at any moment, but if they do at least they will have left behind one of the highest-energy ass-kickingest apocalyptic this-could-be-the-end-of-something-big recordings ever made by anyone anywhere. If that description intrigues you, you need this record. This album, The Heartbreakers as a group, and lead guitarist Johnny Thunders all give the impression of imminent collapse, and it is that very element that elevates Live at Max's above and-beyond being just a great rocknroll album, and into the realm of being a wonderful rock artifact. The Heartbreakers live! ($7.98 postpaid, 213 Park Ave. So., NY, NY 10003.) And where did I surprisingly get to hear The Heartbreakers' "Chinese Rocks"?:

Ramones in concert, Stage West (West Hartford, CT), August 3—To a Ramones novice, comparing one of their very first concerts with one of their very latest would be like comparing identical twins. Indeed, they have only changed in the most subtle of ways; one of the largest differences is that the two guitarists now remove their leather jackets halfway through the show. Once I even saw The Ramones do a two-set show! And for their stoic persistence in the face of general commercial non-acceptance we should consider ourselves blessed. The Ramones may very well be around forever...

Rock N Roll High School (Ramones movie)—...But then again, they may be betting all their marbles on this movie, its soundtrack LP and their upcoming Phil Spector-produced LP. As far as gambles go it is a noble one for they will be tossing it all on something of quality (which in this country seems to stand for little these days). Rock N Roll High School is a perfect B-movie—summer drive-in—rock flick—teendream fantasy, as long as you are able to overlook its "dumb art by smart people" calculations. As may be intended, the picture reinforced my long-standing urges to go back to high school and do it right this time; so painful are these images of revenge in my mind that I couldn't bear to watch Rock N Roll High School...four times! And what was that hand-scrawled message that turns up in the closing moments of Rock N Roll High School?...

The Kids Are Alright (Who movie)—A horse of a different color, another kind of rock movie altogether, and this one does what it does every bit as well as the above achieves what it respectively sets out to do. Many people are bothered by the haphazard front-and-back motion of the clips used in The Kids Are Alright, and the lack of a cohesive tie, but as Pete Townshend himself has said, this film is intended as a scrapbook, not as any sort of complete biography, and in that light it is non-stop excitement by one of the greatest rock bands ever. And if you don't buy that you can put it where the monkey puts the nuts. Speaking of nuts:

Tubeway Army—Replicas (Atco)—Oh, aren't we so cool that we're absolutely cold? Almost reaches chilling in fact, but the off-putting distance created by songs and titles like "Praying To The Aliens," "Me! (?) I Disconnect From You" and "I Nearly Married A Human" successfully keeps Replicas from ever quite reaching that point, for better or worse. If you can listen to this with a grain of salt its Bowiesque electronics are quite pleasant indeed. Once you begin to take this clown seriously, however, you're in trouble.

Bizarros (Mercury)—OK, there are riffs in both the first and last songs here stolen affectionately from "White Light-White Heat" by The Velvet Underground, but after that this is mildly exciting but basically personalityless new wave rock at its best-worst. The Bizarros' drummer died of CO2 poisoning a few weeks ago, which coupled with being on Mercury should nip any possibility of whatever little success The Bizarros could otherwise have hoped for right in the bud.

Armand Schaubroeck Steals—Ratfucker (Mirror)—Again they say it sounds like The Velvets, or in this case Velvets leader Lou Reed anyway. Wrong. Armand is his own man, mines his own field, and does it pretty well, even if they both do aim for that kind of sleazy romanticized street thing. If it's eccentrically straightforward rock, or perhaps straightforwardly eccentric rock, that you want, Armand is the man to see. (Dear Armand, Mirror Records, 645 Titus Ave., Irondequoit NY 14617—ask for a guitar pick.)

The Saucers—"What We Do" b-w "I Didn't Get It"-"Muckraker"—If the new wave were still consistently coming up with local talent like this, with people that are happy with local talent like this, with people that are happy putting out their own records and gigging in their own hometowns, it might be in far less of a shambles than it currently is. I don't mean to damn The Saucers by faint praise, for they are at least as good as, say The Bizarros, and countless other bands with national recording contracts. This EP doesn't quite capture the impact of a live Saucers show, but it is still a very hot homegrown rocknroll record. ($2.50 postpaid, PO Box 452, New Haven CT 06502.) While we're on the subject of local bands, we must get to:

The Foreign Objects—We in this area have also been bestowed with a group that is already of a quality matching many bands on national labels, and The Foreign Objects keep getting better, too! They have enough character to equal five contracted groups, and in their persistent outpouring of hard nut-rockers about wrestling (i.e. "Rock N Wrestling Roll"), war (i.e. "Sergeant Saunders") and perversion (i.e. "Retired Deviant") they are impeccably tasteless. Are The FOs Amherst's greatest natural resource? With any luck they will be playing the area often, and a wonderful (and surprisingly well-produced) five-song EP should be out before too long. Please, don't let local talent like this go to waste. Support your peers. And while I'm gone, do try and arrange a Saucers-Foreign Objects double bill.

California, here I come!

LIVING / SPORTS

... for another winning season

By MARK MARCHAND

For the past two years the UMass football team has become accustomed to winning. In the fall of '78 the Minutemen ushered Dick MacPherson out as head coach with a playoff spot in the Division Two National Championships but, despite a good showing, lost to Lehigh University in the semi-finals. The following year, the Minutemen brought in new head coach Bob Pickett and finished with a 9-4 record while losing to Florid A&M in the nationally televised championship game for the newly created Division 1AA. During those two years UMass managed to maintain a perfect 10-0 record within the Yankee Conference while playing a tough schedule that included several Division One foes including Harvard, Rutgers, and Villanova.

This year shouldn't see any change in the now firmly established Minuteman winning trend.

Still possessing a team with one of the biggest average sizes around, UMass will open up its 10-game season on the road with a 1:30 contest against Division One foe Villanova University on Saturday, September 15. Last year, it was the Villanova Wildcats who came here to Alumni Stadium and spoiled opening day for the Minutemen with a 25-21 defeat. From there, the Minutemen will return home to face Yankee Conference foe, Maine in the home opener on Sept. 22.

It is within the Yankee Conference that UMass is expected to have continued success if pre-season expectations hold up. In the Conference's pre-season luncheon held at Boston University, the majority of the league's coaches picked the Minutemen to repeat as Conference champions. Following UMass in that poll were Rhode Island, Boston University, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Maine. The only two coaches that didn't pick UMass to repeat were BU's Rick Taylor and Rhode Island Coach Bob Griffin. Both feel that their teams are capable of replacing UMass at the top.

One of last year's mainstays, quarterback Mike McEvilly will return this year as a proven winner in the role of Pickett's field general. A senior now, McEvilly appears poised to lead the Minutemen to the top of the heap.

"He can do whatever it takes to get the job done," related head coach Pickett. "He's proven that he wasn't just a supplement to our offense last year and I expect him to have more control in running the offense."

It was last year that the question of McEvilly's arm was constantly raised but, Pickett feels that this won't be the case this year.

"He'll be able to take up the slack created by the loss of offensive players like Dennis Dent," said Pickett.

Other backfielders that Pickett has high hopes for are returnees Clifford Pedrow and Asa Hilliard who underwent surgery on his shoulder last spring. Newcomer Gary Pearson who was originally destined for Maryland is also expected to lend strength to the Minuteman offense. On the offensive line, Pickett has praise for Chris O'Neil who's expected to do a good job of protecting McEvilly with his 6'3" 265 lb. frame.

Defensively, Pickett expects his defenders to blossom into the same type of players that helped UMass to success last year. The UMass mentor does feel that the linebacker position may be a problem although it's "too early to tell."

An addition to this year's schedule will be a pre-season contest against Columbia University at Alumni Stadium on Sept. 8 at 1:30.

Summing up his expectations for the oncoming season, sophomore head coach Pickett expressed confidence that the Minutemen would do well in their conference.

"Hey, we've won it for the past three years, I'm not going to say that I expect anything different," said Pickett.

During the summer, several members of last year's squad tried their luck with pro teams with only one remaining on an NFL roster at press time. That player is linebacker Joe McLaughlin who remained on the New York Giant roster when they cut their squad down to 50 players. Both Dennis Dent and Mike McLaughlin were released from the New England Patriots after stints in the Pats training camp while offensive guard Bruce Kimball was cut from the Pittsburg Steelers near the end of their camp after having what Steeler spokesmen called a "good camp."

Greek system offers a special lifestyle

To be a "Greek" at UMass is to belong to a community of students who call a fraternity (males) or a sorority (females) "home."

Fraternities and sororities offer a special lifestyle to students seeking growth as individuals within a close community at this large University. The atmosphere within the different houses is flexible and diverse, and a variety of political, moral, academic, and social views are represented.

The University of Massachusetts fraternities and sororities will be sponsoring fall rush the month of September. Rush is the special period at the onset of each semester when students are offered the opportunity to view the fraternity-sorority system first hand. Tours of the 16 fraternities and 9 sororities are given as well as social functions designed for meeting the current members. Rushing helps the individual who is interested in the Greek system find the fraternity or sorority best suited for them.

The UMass Interfraternity Council (IFC) will be sponsoring fall fraternity rush beginning the week of September 3rd. All men registered as students with the University are eligible to participate. Beginning Tuesday, September 4th, information tables will be set up in the Campus Center concourse and dining commons. Interested students will be able to sign up for the rush parties at this time and at a general information session on Wednesday, September 5th in the Student Union Ballroom. Registration is free of charge. Individual fraternity chapters will also be having their own information tables at the September 5th orientation session.

The UMass Panhellenic Council will be sponsoring fall formal sorority rush September 17th through 23rd. All women registered as University students are eligible to participate. Rush registration begins September 5th on the Campus Center concourse and continues through Monday, September 17th. Interested women may also register at the Sorority Rush orientation to be held on Monday September 17th at 6:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. There is a three dollar charge to cover the cost of publications.

Any further information about fraternity or sorority rush can be obtained between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. by calling the Greek Affairs Office at 545-2711.

Non-secret fraternity started

Delta Upsilon International Fraternity, the sixth oldest college fraternity and the first non-secret fraternity has successfully established a chapter at UMass.

DU was founded November 4, 1834, at Williams College in Williamstown, Massachusetts. Today there are over 90 chapters throughout the United States and Canada.

The founders of the fraternity presented four guiding principles that Delta Upsilon strives to uphold. They are the promotion of friendship, the diffusion of liberal culture, the advancement of justice, and the development of character.

The most unique feature of Delta Upsilon is that they are a non-secret fraternity. That means that each Delta Upsilon chapter is open to anyone who wishes to attend their membership ceremonies. They feel the ritual is important and parents, faculty, administrators and students will understand fraternity better if they are able to attend the membership ceremonies.

The fraternity has a firm policy of anti-hazing and no pre-initiation activities that are not constructive in nature. DU also has some innovative cultural, leadership, and membership development programs. DU is considered by many to be one of the most progressive and contemporary fraternities in the country.

"Just ask"

"OK, BUT ARE THEY ANY GOOD?"

We make Whole Wheat pizzas to order, starting from scratch. Our dough contains stone ground whole wheat flour, with premium, unbleached white flour added to keep the crust from tasting too heavy. We blend tomatoes with our mix of herbs & spices to get a luscious, zippy sauce—and we add extra sauce free on request.

The cheese is blended in our shop from an unusual mozzerella we carry in from Vermont and a mild cheddar to stand up to our other hearty ingredients. Fresh ground meats come from the local market and we slice our fresh mushrooms and vegetables daily. Honey and sea salt are used in place of refined sugar and salt throughout. Wholesome, premium quality food, freshly baked and delivered hot, fast and free—if you still have to ask if they're any good, you'd better come down to the corner of Main & Triange in Amherst, or the corner of Main & North Maple in Florence to our new location. Come on down and watch us make one for you to try!

Network aids non-traditional students

Are you an "older" student? Do any of the following describe you?

-working at a full or part-time job
-commuting to campus
-living with a spouse or partner (or divorced from one)
-supporting one or more children or other dependents
-a single parent
-a veteran of military service
-in school now after dropping out or "stopping out" for a year or more

Most students who fit more than one of these descriptions are age 22 or older, and have left the path of formal education at some point to live and learn in the "real world." If you're not yet 22 and the situations above already apply, you are a "non-traditional" student (different from the traditional college student who comes straight from high school), and older student services may benefit you too.

The Older Student Service Network (OSSN) is a campus-wide organization of people committed to the collaborative development of improved services for older students. While part of this mission is to better inform older (also non-traditional and commuting students) of existing services, the OSSN also serves as a vehicle through which older students can make known their unmet needs and gaps in the present service system. The overriding aim of the network is to help the university, generally tailored for the 18 to 21 year old traditional undergraduate, to become fully responsive to its real diversity.

At this point, OSSN has two part-time staff—a Coordinator based in Berkshire House, and an Older Student Academic Advisor located at the CASIAC office in Machmer E-27. At the Coordinator's office there is a range of written information about campus and community services in the following categories—Housing, Child Care, Financial Aid, Health Resources, Counseling Resources, Legal Assistance, Student Government, Cutting Living Costs, and Basic Academic Information.

Much of this information is also available from the Information Data Bank (545-1555), which will be handling most of the referral work by telephone. For older students who want to sit down with someone to sort through a more complex situation, IDB will provide the office hours of both the Academic Advisor and the Coordinator.

The OSSN arose after the collapse of the former Counseling Assistance for Older Students. Upon the demise of CAOS last year, a number of people on campus, mostly representatives of service agencies concerned about the fate of older students, joined together in a campus-wide network to discuss and assess the situation and plan for the future. With the backing of the Graduate Student Senate, a part-time Coordinator was hired in the Fall to facilitate the bimonthly meetings of the OSSN and to implement its ideas for filling gaps in services.

In the Spring, the Community Development Center offered to provide office space in Berkshire House, as well as funding for the Coordinator's salary, while the GSS continued to contribute secretarial assistance. CASIAC made its ongoing account for older student academic advising available, the Off-Campus Housing Office consented to subsidize part of the OSSN efforts, and the Dean of Students Office also offered support.

Some of the network's accomplishments last year were: identification of existing services and gaps among them from the providers' view, gathering of current older students demographic information and attitudes toward services through a Project Pulse survey, development of a concise list of services with particular relevance for older students, distributed through University Directions this fall, arrangement for the Working People's Course Schedule to be available for pre-registration, addition of an Older Students Meeting and Academic Advising to the New Students (summer orientation) Program, and coordination of an office and a referral and support system.

Some OSSN ideas that are now in different stages of development are: a free campus telephone system, designed with commuters in mind, an older student corridor in at least one dormitory, special workshops for older students by the Career-Life Planning team of the Community Development Center, highlighting the concerns of older students in a workshop for front-line office staff, development of an RSO group for older students, extended hours for certain campus offices, support groups for older students, joint lobbying with other concerned groups for child care at all university cultural events, and review of university literature for relevance to older students.

How to live at UMass-Advice from the cops

By CAROL ROSENBERG

The cop climbed out of the cruiser, stretched and said, "I wouldn't normally be able to stand here."

It's summertime and he is standing in Southwest looking up the side of a 22-story tower which is inhabited by about 400 Transcendental Meditators who are using the campus for a summerlong conference. It's 3:00 a.m. and they pose no threat to him, any time of day, and the converse is also true.

He has heard too many stories about objects flying out of the tops of the towers, hitting unsuspecting students. And he's heard "pig" called out the towers too many times to feel comfortable standing below one. An irony for the officer who remembers visits at UMass for weekends with friends and has walked freely through Southwest without apprehension.

Commentary

The officer, one of the younger members of the department, works the 11:00 to 7:00 shift — the toughest during the school year, and the quietest during the summer.

He has been covering the campus in his cruiser, keeping his eyes open and seeing no one. And he is anxious for the return of the students. "At least there'll be something to do."

I tell him I'm to be writing a column for the Back to School issue on how to get along with UMass cops, and I'm having a hard time. What can I tell the students? What bothers him most about working here? The name-calling? The abuse?

No, he says you can only be called "pig" so many times and you get used to it.

But there is one thing. Tell them, he says, not to get involved in something they're not a part of. He said he's seen too many times where students caused trouble for walking into something, the police were handling and had to do or say something about which they didn't know.

'Tell them: Even though this is ZooMass — Don't act like a monkey. Act like a human being and all of society will respect you.'

I tell him I'm going to talk to others on the force for help with my column, he wishes me luck and continues his ride around the campus seeing no one, waiting for 7:00 o'clock to roll around so he can start his five-day vacation on the Cape.

A few days later my column still isn't written; so I walk over to Dickinson Hall, where the police department is located, for help.

Last semester, I was told, was the worst for the police in years. Outbreaks of violence — fights, arsons, and attempted homicide — were constant, and the police were anticipating the summertime pace as a chance to relax.

I walk in, for the first time since the semester ends, and the difference is striking. They joke with me and have time to talk without running to break up a fight or pick some drunk person up off of the concourse of the Campus Center.

The sargeant laughs when I tell him what I'm writing about this time, as if to say "Like a column in the Collegian would do anything anyways." But says, "Tell them: "Even thoughthis is ZooMass, don't act like a monkey. Act like a human being and all of society will respect you."'

The other officers laugh. There's the sarge mouthing off again. But they have no better advice. In many ways what they have to say echos the sargeants.

"If we are there, we're there for a reason, because we're needed. If you're not involved, don't make yourself involved," one advises.

Another, "Tell them to obey the law."

Carol Rosenberg is the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Police reporter.

Listen to what your money can buy at Tech Hifi.

On the following pages, you'll find 10 specially-priced stereo systems. One of them is sure to be exactly what you need to make going to school a more relaxed and enjoyable experience. Each is matched and balanced for optimum performance. And, thanks to the buying power of the 68 Tech Hifi stores, they're all priced so you save.

At Tech Hifi, your money also buys strong guarantees. Guarantees you won't get from most stores that sell stereo. They include a 7-Day Money-back Guarantee, a 60-Day Defective Exchange, a 90-Day Full-Credit Trade, and more. They don't cost extra. And you get them in writing, right on your sales slip.

We invite you to come play any of the systems shown here. Or try any of the hundreds of other brand-name components on display in our soundrooms. You'll be pleased to hear what your money can buy at Tech Hifi.

Philips
TDC
Roberts

At Tech Hifi, you can buy quality stereo for less than $200! Our $189 system is a perfect size for dorm rooms and small apartments. And it not only sounds good, but (unlike an all-in-one compact compact system), you'll be able to add more ambitious speakers later when you move to larger quarters.

The system features a Roberts RX115 AM/FM stereo receiver. With a hefty 15 watts rms per channel (8 (8 ohms, 20-20 kHz.) at only 0.2% distortion, the RX115 has considerably more power and less distortion than you'd expect at this price. Which means cleaner sound now, plus a great range of choice if you decide to upgrade the speakers later. (Tech Hifi's 1-Year Loudspeaker Trial makes it easy and economical to upgrade.)

In this system, the Roberts receiver drives a pair of TDC 1 loudspeakers. They deliver surprisingly wide range sound from reasonably-sized cabinets. The automatic turntable is a Collaro 1251 by Philips. It's convenient to use, and comes complete with a magnetic cartridge and gentle damped cueing.

Come play this system in our soundroom, and listen to what $189 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Listen to what $259 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Philips
KENWOOD
PIONEER

If you can invest a little more in stereo, our $259 system gives you lower "lows" and higher "highs".

It begins with a Pioneer SX450 AM/FM stereo receiver. The SX450 has the same fine finish and operating "feel" as the most expensive Pioneer receivers. The SX450 also has a sensitive FM section that can make distant stations sound like locals.

The loudspeakers in this system are Kenwood LSK-100's. Each features a 6-inch woofer with a coaxial 2-inch whizzer cone for extended treble response. And their well-finished enclosures won't intrude unduly on your living space.

The automatic turntable is a Collaro 1251 by Philips. With the 1251, you can play records one at a time, or stack them for uninterrupted listening. (You'll like that a lot when you're too busy to get up and change the record every twenty minutes.) The 1251 comes complete with a simulated walnut base, hinged dustcover, and a magnetic cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom, and listen to what $259 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Listen to what $299 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Our $299 system boasts wider range response, plus a receiver that's ultra-reliable.

This system has a pair of new KLH Classic Jr. loudspeakers. The Classic Jr. is an acoustic suspension design with an 8-inch woofer and a 2.5 inch low mass tweeter. Their sound is clean and lively. And the Classic Jr's oak vinyl veneer enclosures are among the best-looking you'll see.

To power them, there's a Nikko NR315 stereo receiver. It delivers fine sound from all signal sources. And Nikko's exclusive circuit breaker protection system makes the NR-315 essentially fool-proof to install and operate. Which can be very important when your roommates (or children) are at the controls!

For your records, there's an attractive BSR 250S automatic turntable, complete with a base, hinged dustcover, and an ADC magnetic cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom, and listen to what $299 can buy at Tech Hifi.

NIKKO BSR KLH ADC

Listen to what $329 can buy at Tech Hifi.

BSR McDONALD ADC PIONEER KENWOOD

This $329 system has both deeper bass and greater undistorted output than our lower-priced systems. In addition, the turntable has belt-drive , for reduced noise and steadier rotation.

The loudspeakers in this system are Pioneer XD6's. They're a "new generation" vented design, which increases bass output and efficiency at the same time. Each has an 8-inch woofer (critically matched to its enclosure and vent) plus a 2-inch tweeter. They're finished in a warm-toned walnut vinyl veneer.

The control center for this system is a Kenwood KR-4000R stereo receiver. It has typical Kenwood quality throughout, as well as ample power for two sets of appropriate loudspeakers.

The automatic turntable is a new BSR Mk. Va. It can play records individually, or in multiples. The Mk. Va. comes complete with a base, hinged dustcover, and an ADC magnetic cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom and listen to what $329 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Listen to what $369 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Philips
marantz KENWOOD PICKERING

Thanks to an especially well-engineered receiver and set of loudspeakers, our $369 system brings you one step closer to the sound of live music. And the turntable has both belt drive and a synchronous motor for "right on" speed accuracy.

The system features a pair of best-selling Philips 420 loudspeakers. The 420's computer-vented design gives you deeper "reach" into the bass frequencies with no sacifice in output capabilities. An you'll really enjoy the way 420's bring out the fine detail in your favorite music.

The receiver in this system is a luxurious Marantz 1520. It has the sound, features, and styling that make Marantz one of the most respected names in audio.

The turntable in this system is a new Kenwood 850. The 850 can be programmed for single, multiple or repeat play. It comes with a base, dustover, and a Pickering 220 cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom and listen to what $369 can buy at Tech Hifi.

PICKERING
B•I•C
EPI

This $429 system is ideal for people who take their music seriously. It reproduces a full nine musical octaves with great clarity, accuracy, and dispersion.

The "voice" of this system is a pair of brand-new EPI 70C loudspeakers. They're the latest in the series of top-rated bookshelf loudspeakers from EPI. The 70C features EPI's famous Air Spring dome tweeter for smooth, even treble response over an uncommonly wide angle. And the 70C has a newly-designed woofer for cleaner bass and increased efficiency.

The Harman Kardon 330C stereo receiver has an Ultra-wideband amplifier which reproduces the subtle overtones that escape ordinary receivers. Which makes it a perfect choice to drive EPI 70C's. And the 330C's FM performance helps it earn consistent "best-buy" ratings from consumer magazines.

The automatic turntable in this system is also brand new. It's a B•I•C 20Z, with belt drive and a synchronous motor. It comes complete with a Pickering 220 cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom, and listen to what $429 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Listen to what $499 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Long-range FM, "full-sized" bass, and extra record protection are some of the features you'll like about our $499 system.

It begins with a pair of TDC 4 loudspeakers. The TDC 4's 10-inch woofer delivers powerful bass, while specially-formulated cone material cleans up the mid-range "mud" that plagues many two-way systems with similar bass potential. A carefully-matched 2-inch tweeter delivers sparkling, well-dispersed highs. And TDC's advanced Real Time crossover lends an exciting feeling of "depth" to music.

To power the TDC 4's, there's a Pioneer SX580 stereo receiver. The SX850 has a sensitive FM section, plus useful features such as a pair of power output meters.

The Toshiba A270 turntable in this system has belt-drive and automatic tonearm return. It also has low-friction tonearm pivots for reduced record wear and better sound. It comes with an ADC 95QE cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom and listen to what $499 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Listen to what $559 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Here's the famous Advent sound in a beautifully-balanced, attractively-priced $559 system.

The Advent/1 is Advent's newest bookshelf loudspeaker. For extended, low distortion bass, it has few peers. The Advent/1 also has a carefully-chosen octave-to-octave musical balance that sounds natural on all kinds of music.

We've chosen the Kenwood KR3090 stereo receiver to drive the Advent/1's in this system. With 26 watts per channel (8 ohms, 20-20 kHz.) at only 0.05% distortion, the KR3090 has ample power to take advantage of the Advent/1's extended bass response. And exclusive Kenwood design features (such as printed resistors and direct preamp connections) reduce audible distortion and increase reliability.

A Sanyo TP636 semi-automatic, belt-driven turntable completes this system. In combination with an Audio-Technica AT100E cartridge, the TP636 tracks at just 1.5 grams. Which means your records can sound new for hundreds of plays.

Ohm ortofon HITACHI SAE SCIENTIFIC AUDIO ELECTRONICS INC

Our $680 system is moderately priced. But the sound is distinctly "high end".

OHM L loudspeakers are one reason why, and we'll let High Fidelity magazine describe them to you: "In listening tests, the OHM L's aspirations exceeded those expected of its price class by a notable margin. The overall sound is solid, yet transparent and detailed. Deep bass is tight and well-controlled, with a sense of ease that is maintained to relatively high listening levels... Power handling and freedom from distortion are first class... Stereo imaging is excellent...". To which we'll add that OHM L's are compact, efficient, and come in real walnut veneer enclosures.

The receiver in this system is an SAE R3C. It's designed with the same skill as all SAE components, and the R3C is a real joy to handle and hear.

Finally, you get a precise Hitachi 324 semi-automatic, belt-driven turntable with an audiophile-approved Ortofon FF15XE cartridge.

Listen to what $899 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Even though this system isn't exactly inexpensive, we still think you'll be amazed by how much sound $899 buys at Tech Hifi. If you like your music (rock, disco, or whatever) loud and clear, this is your system.

Best-selling Ohm C2 loudspeakers help make it all happen. They're a 3-way, optimally-vented design, with a high-performance 10-inch woofer, a 2-inch low tweeter, and a 1-inch dome super-tweeter. Ohm C2's are efficient. And they're one of the very few high-accuracy, high-output loudspeakers available at any price.

A Hitachi SR604 stereo receiver really lets the C2's get it on. The SR604 has a "turbo-charged" Class G amplifier, which doubles power instantly to reproduce musical peaks effortlessly. And there's also an effective subsonic filter (so all that power is available to play music, not feedback or rumble in the program material), plus a flashing LED power output display.

A sophisticated Philips 777 all-electronic turntable completes this remarkable system. Its floating suspension means feedback won't intrude, even during the most intense listening sessions. It comes with a professional-quality Pickering 440E cartridge.

Come play this system in our soundroom, and listen to what $899 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Library shut down

'This is no way to start year,' Koffler says

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler yesterday announced the library will be closed indefinately because an engineering consulting firm reported the hazard of falling brick chips from the structure.

At the first press conference since he became Chancellor five weeks ago, Koffler commented, "This is no way to start the academic year."

He described the problem in "layman's terms", saying, "The brick panels are attached to the concrete walls of the building in a manner that makes the whole facade unsafe." Koffler was referring to a report made by the firm of Loomis and Loomis, Inc. of Windsor, Conn. which resulted in the closing of the building Friday.

While University officials await recommendations from two other consulting firms, library Director Richard J. Talbot announced plans to move 250,000 of the 1,000,000 books contained in the library to the Goodell Building, which formerly served the campus as the main library.

Limited access to the 28-story library will be made available to graduate student research and to faculty members who will enter the building through a tunnel in the South College building, Talbot said at the news conference yesterday.

"Amherst College has volunteered to assist us," Talbot said of the interim plan, and some of the UMass library staff will be working in the Robert Frost library at Amherst College.

Koffler said he could not predict the amount of time the building will be blocked off, but said of the Loomis and Loomis report, "If the present analysis is borne out, we will have to remove the siding."

According to the Loomis report, the brick panels of 5 feet by 30 feet which serve only cosmetic purposes for the structure of the building are not sound, H. Jackson Littlefield, director of physical planning for the University, said yesterday.

He said the building itself is structurally sound and the present danger is only of the bricks falling and not of the building collapsing. In event of an earthquake tremor, Littlefield said, "a section of the building could fall instead of chips."

When asked if the problem stemmed from the design of the building he said, "It would seem that way."

On campus: 'No problem'

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT and GAYLE YOUNG

University officials said they were more pleased than ever at this year's opening of the campus and said they have hit on a "formula" that will relieve the traffic jams, mix-ups and housing hassles of the past.

Only a handful of students who wanted housing were without a place to stay, and problems with buildings and dormitories were reported to be minimal as the school went into its second year of a revised housing policy which has the housing office assign rooms to all students who have paid their bill on time.

"We're in a holding pattern now until Wednesday until we cut no-shows," said Gerald Quarles, housing assignment coordinator. "So far,things are going pretty good.

He said about 20 students who had sought University housing were not placed in the residential system, but only because they

By JIM MORAN

A very tight housing market is creating problems for the near 9,000 students seeking off-campus housing. The UMass Off-Campus Housing Office reported yesterday that as many as 200 to 300 students may be left without housing because they did not pay their bills or their bills did not clear through the Bursar's Office by the August 10th deadline.

The Off-Campus Office also reported that some 200 students had visited the center yesterday alone, and that the hardest hit are the undergraduate males, who landlords feel would be bad risks because of possible noise and sanitation problems.

There were also at least two people who could not afford apartments until financial aid came through. The office concluded that there could be more hardship cases similar to these with other Financial Aid recipients.

Off-Campus Housing Director, JoAnne Levenson, said "a lot of students probably

Richardson eyes presidency

BOSTON (AP) - Ambassador Elliot Richardson will decide very soon if he is to be a candidate for president, two of his key political advisors reported yesterday.

Richardson, en route back to Washington from his Cape Cod home, was not available for comment on the development. However, his associates said it is not likely he will have anything to say on politics until he completes his report to President Carter on the recently completed Law of the Sea Conference.

Richardson, who has held four cabinet posts as well as the ambassadorship to England, took himself out of a possible run for state governor last year because of the sea conference.

Salinger nabbed in raid

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)— Pierre Salinger, former press spokesman for President John F. Kennedy, was arrested with a French television crew in Belfast Tuesday when British troops and police officers raided an office of the Irish Republican Army's political front, Sinn Fein, official sources reported.

Police headquarters said that "American and foreign journalists" and Sinn Fein officials were detained in the swoop on a community center used by Sinn Fein in Belfast's Ballymurphy district where officials of the movement were briefing the newsmen.

N.H. oil spill damages fish

NEWINGTON, N.H. (A P)

A 25,000 gallon oil spill, indirectly blamed on Hurricane David, may seriously damage marine life and disrupt fishing near the state's Seacoast area, according to scientists at the University of New Hampshire.

Galen Jones, professor of marine microbiology at the university, said the industrial fuel oil was too heavy to dissolve in water to poison fish and shellfish, but it would coat young forms of marine life in the area and kill them.

'David' whips coastline as thousands flee S.C.

By THOMAS C. COTHRAN
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, S.C. —Thousands fled from this 300- year-old bastion of the Confederacy on yesterday as Hurricane David roared northward along the Georgia coast, lashing the shoreline with treetoppling winds and tides.

"There's no question about it," said Dick Shenot of the National Weather Service at Charleston. "Charleston is going to get hit."

More than 5,000 persons, many from the elegant Hilton Head Island resort, took shelter as the storm, which had already claimed more than 800 lives in the Caribbean, continued its sweep along the Atlantic coast. It was expected to hit land again by late evening.

Residents all along the swampy Georgia and South Carolina coasts were evacuated as gale winds knocked down trees and power lines. Schools were closed.

About 3,000 persons fled Savannah, Ga., to the south and thousands of others were routed from the resorts of Sea Island and St. Simons Island just off Brunswick, Ga.

Shenot predicted that hurricane-force winds would sweep this historic city of 60,000 residents, home of Ft. Sumter where the Civil War began, with tides six to eight feet above normal.

At noon, the hurricane, packing 90 mile per hour winds, was located near latitude 31.0 north and longitude 80.9 west, or about 75 miles south-southeast of Savannah, Ga. It was moving toward the north at 12 to 15 mph over open water and weather officials said it could intensify.

Hurricane warnings were posted from Jacksonville, Fla. north to Cape Fear, N.C.

"The projected track right now takes the center near, and parallel to, the Georgia coast today and near South Carolina tonight," said forecaster Mark Zimmer at the National Hurricane Center in Miami. "If there's a slight jog in the track, it could come over to the Georgia coastline this afternoon."

Weather officials worried that the storm tides would reach the South Carolina shore during the normal high tides late yesterday evening.

"I think that we have to realize that we see a possibility of very high water, higher water than most people have ever seen," said Joseph P. Riley Jr., mayor of Charleston.

South Carolina has not been hit hard by a hurricane since Hazel devastated the Myrtle Beach area in 1954, killing one person and causing damage estimated at $27 million.

The two-lane bridge to Hilton Head was closed to traffic and power to the island was shut off. Beaufort County civil defense authorities estimated 2,000 persons had taken refuge in McCracken High School at Bluffton. Patients at the Hilton Head Island hospital were evacuated by ambulance to Beaufort.

BU strike looms as classes begin

By STEPHANIE S. COOKE
Associated Press

BOSTON - Negotiators for Boston University and some 850 clerical workers headed back to the bargaining table last night after the union overwhelmingly rejected a contract offer earlier in the day.

With a federal mediator on hand, the 8 p.m. talks were slated to last through the night if necessary. Classes begin tomorrow.

However, Robert C. Bergenheim, BU Vice President for Public and Labor Relations, said the administration would suggest "that we knock off at midnight because we're all exhausted," from an all-night session that ended yesterday morning.

The union, which claims 400 to 500 members but represents some 850 workers, scheduled a meeting for noon today to take further action if an agreement was not reached.

On the recommendation of their negotiators, some 250 members of District 65 of the Wholesale, Retail and Processing Union rejected an offer made by BU shortly before 10 a.m. yesterday. A short while later they gave their leadership authority to call a strike.

The offer was the first ever by BU, which refused to negotiate with the union until May, about five months after the National Labor Relations Board approved it as a bargaining agent.

Although classes start tomorrow, Bergenheim said he doesn't anticipate major problems if the secretaries and technical workers strike.

"It would not affect the running of the university. It would certainly be a nuisance, but we can cover their jobs with volunteers or supervisors," the BU negotiator said.

Bergenheim said the union originally asked for a 118 percent increase in wages, fringes and benefits in the first year of a proposed two-year contract, but lowered the demand to 35 percent.

"The university," Bergenheim said, "started at six and went all the way to seven percent."

Details of the second year were not worked out in the contract offer, he said.

Under the university's offer, workers would receive a 35-cent hourly increase, retroactive to June. Those on the payroll last year would get a one-time cash payment of $200 as well, Bergenheim said.

Confusion creeps on campus . . .

By ROBIN MASON
Collegian Staff

"Excuse me please, can I get in here?"

"Sorry, have to get in line, everybody's waiting."

"I just want to write an article."

Once across the threshold of the College of Arts and Science Information and Advising Center's crowded office, I hear over the frantic voices of irate students a sad voice bleat out, "Will someone please help me, I want to withdraw."

A rush of silence follows as each one of us contemplates what we've all thought of a hundred times today but did not dare carry to its full conclusion.

The scared young man is assisted to a quiet corner by a reassuring CASIAC employee. Inevitably we recover, decide to hang on at least another day, and let the panic subside.

The frenzy rejuvenates as angry questions fly through the air stinging the ever-helpful counselors. "They lied, they lied to me, they told me I didn't have to take Stats 140 and now it's full."

Yet the constant ringing of the phone assures us we are not in the Twilight Zone on some crazy planet, but only on earth in a crazy society.

A dejected student catches my eye as she walks in with a look of admitted defeat on her face. A compassionate assistant offers her help and invites her to play with OSCAR, the computer for assisting in course selection, which unfortunately, is not as helpful as expensive.

Another student blocks my view and asks no one in particular, "What should I major in?" A second student at his side declares "I don't want a major, can't I just take courses?".

The moaning and groaning never ends. Who wants to take Rhetoric, who cares about Foreign Language? But CASIAC carries on, explaining the core credit system, guiding the majorless and rearranging schedules.

In this theater of the absurd one can come for much more than just information, humoring and bitching. Linda Reinen, a very tired freshman came here to rest. "It's so big, I've never walked so far in my life—do you know where I can find a map?"

Diane Pedulla, Co-director and counselor at CASIAC comments, "It's been about the same this year as last, only this time we can't give people as much reassurance of getting into courses. Before, we'd advise them to run around and go to the classes and sooner or later they'd get in.

"Today we're telling them they'd better be prepared to take second and third choices." Asked why, she explained there were fewer TA's due to a budget cut, thus less classes.

As I walked down the steps into the outside world, a small voice asks me, "Can you tell me where Cardiac Arrest or something like that is?" "oh, you mean CASIAC? That's in Machmer E-20. . ."

The UMass library, which was completed in 1973 at a cost of $16.5 million, was constructed by Daniel O'Connell's Sons of Holyoke. C.E. Maguire served as the design engineer, and the well known Edward Durrell Stone was the architect, according to the UMass news bureau.

O'Connell's Sons is the same construction firm which built the Campus Center Garage, which is currently under investigation by the Special Commission Concerning State and County Buildings, known as the Ward Commission after it's chairman, former Amherst College President John W. Ward. The commission is attempting to find who is responsible for the flaws.

Koffler said University officials yesterday met with the state Bureau of Building Construction Director Stuart Lesser in Boston to discuss the problems surrounding the library.

Koffler would not comment on possible legal action against any of those involved with the construction and design of the library.

Littlefield said two other consulting firms - Agnoli, Inc. of Longmeadow and Gilbert Small, Inc. of Boston were called in because, "the problem here is much more extensive," than that of the garage, which only required the consultation of the Loomis and Loomis firm.

waited until the last minute, whereas house hunting is usually done throughout the month of August." She said in some cases it is not the student's fault because they have jobs or live out of the state and are unable to come to Amherst to look for a place to live.

According to Levenson, increased public transportation has made the colleges in the area more acessible, thus causing a "desirability" for moving off campus. Levenson also said off-campus housing rents could be raised arbitrarily this year from as much as "three to 20 percent" because of expected increases in utility rates and because "students will pay the prices the landlords charge."

Mary Wentworth, a spokeswoman of the Colonial Village Apartments Tenants Union, said students need to become more aware of the housing problem and question rates and rights.

"Traditionally, students are a very transient community who have not become involved with tenant's rights on any large scale," Wentworth said. Wentworth concurred with Levenson that students, who have paid high rents without questioning, have contributed to the steady rise of rental rates in the area.

Landlords have inconsistent practices in determining rent rates although it traditionally depends on the number of rooms in the facility. Increased costs of home heating oil, electricity and water have had an impact on landlord's expenses.

Some landlords claim high property taxes as a reason for raising rent, but Amherst Selectwoman Nancy Eddy disagrees. "The town of Amherst has had a pretty stable tax rate of $30 per thousand (100 percent valuation) for the past couple of years," Eddy said. And Wentworth said, "Tax rates as rational for raising rents is just false because it is deductible."

Another factor in rent rate determination may be the number of persons living in a unit. Wentworth said some landlords have been known to charge $10 extra to rend a two-bedroom apartment to three students, but said, "It is perfectly illegal."

Levenson said general economics are a factor, and high rents are also a way of discriminating against minority and single-parent tenants—because some may not be able to pay the high prices. She said she and others in the Hampshire County are currently working on a project to stop housing discrimination, but that it is difficult because landlords in a single family complex with more than four units are not governed by the same laws as corporate-run apartments.

Levenson had some words of caution for students living off-campus. She said students should be aware that they must receive a statement of conditions from day one of occupancy, as written proof for incurred damages, and a receipt of their security deposit. Levenson said the law states that no more than the first month's rent may be charged as security deposit, and that the deposit must be banked and the tenant given a copy of the account number within 30 days.

Levenson said in eviction cases, tenants have a right to a 14-day written notice before a summary of process writ is filed with the courts, and that non-payment of rent is the only viable excuse for eviction short of proof of outstanding damages to the property.

For the more than 9,000 students living in off-campus dwellings, the Off-Campus Housing Office has walk-in referrals, legal aid and counseling services available. They are located in the rear of Munson Hall, next to the Whitmore Administration Building.

failed to correctly fill-out and return housing information.

This year, for the first time, a dormitory lease was instituted, and new forms were used to confirm dormitory housing. Some students failed to return necessary forms, Qarles said, and were not placed.

"We had some problems with people who didn't do things correctly," he said. "We covered everybody who did things right."

Assistant Police Directory Larry Holmes said he had a battery of officers directly traffic during the two opening days. "We hit on a good formula," he said. "There wasn't the bottlenecks of traffic we had three years ago or the delays."

Holmes said officers directed parents and incoming students to unload their cars then pull away and park on their perimeter of campus. "We had a nice flow on incoming and outgoing cars," he said. "We tried to keep spaces open."

Holmes and Robert Campbell, director of Residential Resource Management, said they were also impressed with the efficiency of student residential assistants and dorm officials who directed new and returning students quickly and with minimum hassles.

They also praised the co-heads of residence of John Adams upper dormitory, Brian Cummings and Allision Hopkins, who borrowed walkie talkies from the Union Program Council and set up a base network to direct traffic in the busiest section of the Southwest Residential Area.

On non-residential areas of campus yesterday, it was lines as usual, as students queued up to add, drop, or change courses. The longest line stretched out from Munson Hall, as students sought to pick parking decals from the parking office there.

Off campus, the Amherst area housing market remained tight. Apartment complexes in the immediate area were near full with few if any vacancies available. The situation was better in areas farther away from campus.

Quarles said an estimated 10,900 students were in residence halls, and were full near ot capacity.

Beginning today, "no-shows" will be crossed off housing lists, freeing space for those still without housing.

A problem was reported at Melville Dorm in Southwest, where roof repairs are underway. Workers are cracking tar on the roofs as they complete repairs, Quarles said, but only a few rooms were affected.

Another small problem developed in Southwest where a room was found filled with fruit left by persons attending a recent Transcendental Meditation conference at the University, Quarles said. According to him the fruit had rotted, and created "quite a smell."

The generally smooth opening was a result of a new University policy where students who did not pay bills by the Aug. 10 due date were struck from housing lists, said Campbell. That provides more room for students who pay bills on time, he said.

University housing offers space for 11,400 students in 6,000 rooms in 41 buildings, one of the largest dormitory systems in the country. This year, though, Knowlton Dormitory is closed for renovations, cutting available space to about 10,967, Campbell said.

By August 17, Campbell said, about 1,600 sudents had been cut from housing lists because of overdue bills.

Two Greek chapters will close their doors

By MARK L. CURELOP

The UMass chapters of Phi Mu Delta fraternity, which violated health codes, and Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, which had been experiencing management difficulties, will shut down this semester.

Phi Mu Delta, located in Fraternity-Sorority Park near the Orchard Hill Residential Area was closed by the Amherst Board of Health late this summer because of unsanitary conditions. Charles Drake, from the town sanitation department, said spoiled food had been left in the fraternities' refrigerator and exposed wires violated the Massachusetts electrical code.

Other violations included trash strewn throughout the house; two inches of water in the basement; broken windows, and no emergency lighting fixtures.

Amherst Savings Bank, and the Northampton Institute for Savings, the loan association for the Fraternity, could not be reached for comment.

Kappa Alpha Theta on 788 North Pleasant Street, near the UMass School of Education building, was closed by their National Office, said Shannon Ellis, director of Greek Affairs.

The national office wanted to reorganize and re-colonize the Amherst chapter Corinne Campbell, president of the UMass Pan-Hellenic Council said. She said the women currently in the chapter did not want to devote the time to restructure the organization. The alternative was to colonize Kappa Alpha Theta with entirely new women.

The chapter was sent back to the sorority's national office, and once received, the national board votedto close the chapter.

Bus service now 'free for all'

Free bus service, formerly available in this area only to members of the Five College community, will expand today when Five Colleges, Inc., and Western Mass. Bus Lines, Inc., consolidate their individual services between Northampton and Amherst into a single system which will provide free public transportation during the academic year.

The bus company will operate the service on a contract with the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority.

Five Colleges, which will be paying 30 percent of the cost of the bus service during the academic year, does not expect that the new system will reduce its transportation budget, E. Jefferson Murphy, Five College coordinator, said yesterday.

The Federal government will pay 40 percent of the cost of service during the academic year—and the Commonwealth 30 percent—under an already-established formula for free-fare bus service, said Murphy.

During summer vacation, when the cost formula changes slightly, the frequency of service will decrease, a fare will be charged, and the community share of the cost will be paid by the city of Northampton and the town of Amherst, he said.

Buses are scheduled to begin at 6:30 a.m. on weekdays at John M. Greene Hall on the Smith campus and run every 10 minutes during morning and afternoon rush periods, and at 15-minute intervals throughout the remainder of the day. They will run less frequently on evenings and weekends with the last buses leaving Smith at midnight Monday through Thursday and at 2 a.m. Saturday and Sunday mornings.

Northampton stops will be at John M. Greene Hall, the Academy of Music, Old South Street, Pomeroy Terrace, and Sheldon Field. In Amherst, the buses will stop at the Campus Center, Southwest residential complex, and the School of Business Administration on the University of Massachusetts campus and at Fearing Street, the Amherst Post Office, Peter Pan bus terminal, and Amherst College.

The buses, which will be the PVTA vehicles rather than the green and orange buses previously used on the Five College route, will stop only at the designated areas. Five Colleges has asked PVTA to provide bus stop signs and shelters at all stops which do not already have them, Murphy said.

Five College officials have also asked Western Mass. Bus Lines to employ drivers who are Five College students on the route insofar as possible. Students now operate all the buses in the Five College private transportation system, which includes an additional route between the University of Massachusetts and Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley as well as direct van routes between Smith, Hampshire College, and Mount Holyoke.

'Five Colleges, which will be paying 30 percent of the cost of the bus service during the academic year, does not expect that the new system will reduce its' transportation budget.'

Although officials of PVTA, the bus company, and Five Collees have worked out most of the details of the Northampton-Amherst system, there are still some unknown factors, according to Robert Jordan, former manager of Five College transporation and recently named Five College business manager.

Additional stops—13 instead of the five on the earlier Five College route— may make the timetable difficult for students on tight class schedules, he said. Also, it is hard to predict whether the new system will be adequate for the number of riders it attracts until public response to it is clear.

The service, which will be governed by a one-year contract which the principles expect will be signed shortly, will be evaluated at the end of the first semester, Jordan said.

Harness all the nervous energy

There are 4,000 freshmen entering the University of Massachusetts this fall semester. With all the talk of an impending energy shortage, rebounding to and fro in everyday conversation, an idea arises. Why not harness all that nervous energy, 4,000 strong, and smash apathy to bits and pieces?

We all know the disadvantages of a large school. But clouded beneath the hurried atmosphere and hectic disarray is a wealth of opportunities.

There is a miniature political system called the Student Goverment Association, a newspaper, an organization producing concerts, and a hundred other student-run organizations. The only problem is these oportunities do not come to you. What an interested student must do is walk to the Campus Center, or wherever, and speak up.

Criticism is fine and dandy,

is the ultimate solution

Criticism is fine and dandy, but involvement is the ultimate solution. The grassroot problem affecting our society, including the broad spectrum of student groups, is a lack of input. A lack of input from a broad range of students, including, especially, the freshman class.

For any organization to function in the student's best interest, a strong display of interest is imperative. Problems arise under the deluge of sweeping apathy. It is that apathy which separates the few students in power from the rest, creating attitudes of free-wheeling selfishness. No organization is immune to these attitudes.

If the Student Government Association, the Collegian, Student Activities, or the Union Program Council were flooded today with this new blood, cynicism would change into action.

Behind every organization are students, and the earlier one gets involved the better. The educational experiences this school offers go far beyond the classes and the books. Getting involved and taking advantage of the numerous opportunities is an ideal way to get your money's worth.

A cause for the 80's

By JIM MORAN

This past summer, much broadcasting time and many column inches were devoted to the plight of the "boat people" fleeing the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, and the subsequent rift this issue caused in the ranks of the American Left. However, one thing which underlies all this debate, and which was largely ignored, is the lack of concern for human dignity and political rights which this struggle and its historical predecessors have demonstrated.

Both Roosevelt and Truman permitted the existence of work camps to imprison Americans of Japanese extraction. Both of these "leaders" did nothing to stop the special exemption from embargo limitations that General Motors was granted to ship parts to build tanks for Hitler's armies. Our public policy of respect for human rights was contradicted by our actions.

The feud between Joan Baez and Jane Fonda is just an extension of this attitude which permeates our government. We were afraid to admit we made a mistake in Vietnam, but are now afraid to act for what is right. Though the Baez-Fonda disagreement has, to a large extent, been exaggerated, one very clear distinction between the two women remains: the concern of the politics of propoganda versus the respect for individual life and liberty.

As we have seen, Fonda seems to think that socialist governments have a license to practice genocide, by virtue of their philosophy, while she condemns oppression coming from the right-wing "imperialist" governments. Her justification for the placing of Chinese ethics and dissidents in Vietnam in "re-education centers" [read concentration camps] is that the US caused the economic and geographical devastation in Southeast Asia. Fonda also argues, since we have not recognized Vietnam nor made reparations, we have no right to criticize. She was on target when she said the US didn't belong in Indochina, where we only added to the destruction of their society. But to ignore any wrongs that they are committing by reason of the wrongs we committed, is just inhumane.

Joan Baez, an ally of Fonda's in the anti-war movement of the 60's and 70's, has devoted most of her life to fighting oppression, violence and the lack of respect for human rights. From her earliest days in the folk music scene, Joan Baez sang in prisons, went to jail for her involvement in the civil rights marches in the South, and has strongly condemned violations of human rights wherever they exist, regardless of political philosophies. She has critcized the violence and political injustice after the assasination of Allende in Chile, but she has also helped dissidents escape from the Soviet-controlled state of Czechoslavakia. Through her work in Amnesty International, and her affiliation with Janeta Sagan in Humanitas, she has found repeated and well-documented evidence of censorship, torture, and murder in the "tiger cages" and "re-education centers" in Vietnam. It is estimated that as many as 200,000 may now be political captives of the Vietnamese government. Yet the Vietnamese government still will not permit a United Nations inspection team to check out the conditions. What have they got to hide? To call Baez a "tool of the CIA," as Chicago Seven lawyer and activist William Kuntsler has done, is McCarthyism-in-reverse. The ailure of Fonda, and her counterparts, to sign Baez's letter to the Vietnamese government indicates the historical repetition of putting political propaganda over concern for human rights to freedom of free expression and transience.

We are a world bound by geographical borders and governments which pit human beings against human beings. When Fidel Castro criticizes the US as imperialistic, does he tell the Cuban people that his armies are making their "imperialistic" colonies in Angola and Zaire? When Brezhnev blasts the Western world for their capitalist, explitative concerns, does he tell the people of the USSR about his Lincoln Continental—gift of the US State Department? Yet these differing ideologies gain strength every day, sending their subservients off to get butchered in a war created by them for profit. Yet they ignore their expounded views of equality and freedom, jailing those who speak out against the realities of their established bureaucracies. Are we, as Bob Dylan once sang, "Only a Pawn in Their Game?"

It would speak well of students to organize and make human rights a concern for the 80"s beginning right now. There are several organizations, such as Amnesty International and the American Friends Services Committee, which are committed to the causes of dissidents and political and personal freedoms. But even on a one-on-one basis, there is a lot of consciousness-raising to be done. As Thomas Paine put it in 1776, "Tis the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles unto death."

No nuke fall-out at Seabrook plant

To the editor:

In the past several years the anti-nuclear movement has educated hundreds of thousands of people about the dangers of nuclear energy. This education has motivated thousands more to demonstrate their opposition to nukes through acts of civil disobedience. The accident at Three Mile Island has shown us once and for all that nuclear disaster is not merely a possibility, but an immediate threat to our lives. In spite of the severity of the partial meltdown at Harrisburg, the government and industry continue to lie about the dangers of nuclear energy. This blatant deception shows their total disregard for our health and safety.

Realizing that the time has come to act, anti-nuclear and progressive groups from around the country have formed the Coalition for Direct Action at Seabrook to shut down the Seabrook nuke beginning on October 6th. By direct action, we mean stopping the nukes ourselves, without appealing to or recognizing the legitimacy of state or corporate authority. Direct action is, therefore, a departure from symbolic forms of protest.

The goal of the action is to nonviolently enter the Seabrook site, and to prevent construction by staying there. Our strength lies in our numbers, in the depth of understanding of every participating Affinity Group of our goals and possible strategies, and in our commitment to refrain from any acts of violence. The collective and nonviolent intent of this action excludes all weapons. Such implements as ladders, shovels and wire cutters may be necessary to gain access to construction areas. The goal of this action is not to provoke a fight, nor is it to be arrested. Rather, our vision is to collectively create, in conjunction with local residents, an anti-nuclear community of people building, gardening and living on the site, on the model of the successful European anti-nuclear occupations.

Coalition for Direct Action at Seabrook

Close the doors on wasteful energy

To the editor:

The University Staff Association feels that the University should reflect the national concern for conserving energy. Therefore, we are requesting of Mr. George Norton, Director of the Physical Plant, that he post all exist doors with signs which would request all doors be kept shut after passing through, and that all University personnel should assist in this program. It may seem to be a minor request, but everyone knows what a difference this makes in homes. This would be a good way to conserve heat in the winter, and, for those buildings that are air conditioned, cool air in the summer.

Carol Rhodes,
President, University Staff Association

Tsongas vows war on nuclear plants

By JOANNE D'ALCOMO
Associated Press

BOSTON — U.S. Senator Paul E. Tsongas says he will fight future nuclear power plant construction in the state — including the proposed Pilgrim II plant in Plymouth — until utilities pay more attention to conservation and renewable energy.

Tsongas and members of the Legislature's Energy Caucus also urged Massachusetts' municipally-owned power companies not to increase their investment in the financially troubled nuclear power plant now under construction in Seabrook, N.H.

"I'm calling on the utilities of Massachusetts to lead the way to maximum energy from renewable resources and conservation. Until this is achieved, I will oppose new nuclear plants in Massachusetts," the freshman Democrat told a Statehouse news conference.

Tsongas charged that some utility companies are "resisting the inevitability" of solar, wind, wood and hydroelectric power.

"The notion that renewables...are far off in the future is dead wrong," he said.

"These sources are being utilized at a token level while priority is given to the worse options — nuclear and coal."

Tsongas also said the state Department of Public Utilities should require that utilities explore all "reasonable solar and conservation alternatives" before expanding their nuclear, oil and coal-fired plants.

"The kind of 'macho' approach to energy that comes from these huge systems is outdated," he said.

Tsongas said that while he supported nuclear power as an alternative in the past and is not ruling it out in the future, he believes it has "serious safety and environmental problems" that cause him not to consider it a major new power source.

Tsongas, of Lowell, predicted the state could put off further development of nuclear plants for "at least a decade," possibly until 2000.

A spokesman for Boston Edison, which has applied for permits to construct the Pilgrim II nuclear power plant in Plymouth, said the utility has calculated Massachusetts will need more generating capacity as early as 1985.

Edison has already spent more than $300 million on the new plant, even though it has not yet received final state and federal approval, said spokesman Walter Salvi.

Salvi said engineering and design plans are complete, and the reactor and other components have been purchased.

Trustees come to campus

Members of the UMass Board of Trustees arrived in Amherst yesterday for their first visit to this campus since December 1978 to attend a dinner with University deans, hosted by new Amherst campus Chancellor Henry Koffler, and a reception with faculty representatives.

After breakfast this morning the trustees are scheduled to tour deteriorating buildings on campus, including an examination of the exterior of the main library, now closed for an undetermined time. (See related story page 1.) The group has added the problems concerning the library to the agenda of its regular monthly meeting, scheduled for 2 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The 24 member board will also attend a luncheon, hosted by student trustee Rich LaVoice, with representatives of various student groups. They will give an hour long presentation to the trustees concerning the UMass Student Credit Union, Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, and the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide.

In addition to the library, the trustees are expected to act on the adoption of the University's 1980 operating budget and approval of the maintenance budget request from the state for 1981.

Trustees rarely come to the Amherst campus because they say it is too far from Boston, where the majority of them live.

Trustees have also had a history of confrontations with the students at the Amherst campus—which have included pickets, rallies, and protestors chanting under their meeting room windows.

Three years ago an elderly trustee was grabbed by protesting students in an elevator. Some trustees then vowed to never come to the Amherst campus again.

Former terrorist claims Customs helped run guns

BOSTON (AP) — A self-proclaimed former terrorist with the Irish Republican Army claims the federal Customs Service and New York City union bosses helped him smuggle American guns to Ireland.

In an interview with the Boston Globe, Belfast native Peter McMullen, who is now in hiding in San Francisco, said he bought weapons in Massachusetts, New York, Conecticut, Vermont and as far as way as the Carolinas.

The self-professed seven-year veteran of the IRA said he never had customs problems during the year he spent smuggling guns from New York City.

"Someone took care of that here and on the other side, too," he said. "Telephone calls would be made to a contact in Dublin giving the date of arrival of the container, the numbers and so forth, and it would be let through customs."

A union official in New York, McMullen says, had perfected the smuggling routes years before, "when the Queen Mary was still making runs across the Atlantic."

The 32-year-old McMullen detailed how weapons he and others purchased would be stuffed in stripped-down furniture and sent to "an officer of one of the transport unions" in New York City who was "in close contact with an official in the longshoremen's union."

The shipments were then loaded aboard sealed containers bound by ship for Dublin.

Once the weapons reached Dublin, they would be taken to a warehouse near the Northern Ireland border.

Spikers hold tryouts; season opens Tuesday

by MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Tryouts were held yesterday for those interested in joining the UMass women's volleyball team. Held in NOPE gym, the tryouts were divided into an afternoon and evening session. For the first session, 22 people attended; they were comprised of freshmen who played in high school, people who haven't played in high school, and the "veterans"—among them Ellen Braun, Brenda Simmons, Joyce Gresl, Donna Sasse, and Sally Anderson.

The ones in charge of the tryouts, new coach Eileen Marasco and former coach Mike Rhodes, now assistant, began promptly at two, with a head count and giving the orders to go through the first exercise—three runs around thew warped-floored gym. Both supervised the prospects as if the team was set and ready to play; each exercise became redundant with either coach halting the exercise to repeat the moves.

All exercise done within NOPE was designed to tone muscles needed to play volleyball well—toes, ankles, legs, forearms, etc. Included were the basic movements—passing, setting, spiking, digging, and running into position.

As soon as all tryouts have ended, Coach Masrasco will decide who will play next week in the home opener against Warsaw Academy next Tuesday night. According to her, the decision will be made by Friday afternoon.

Those chosen will face a challenge in the coming weeks. The weekend after the opener features the University of Rhode Island Tournament; UMass will face some of the best teams in the East (including, probably, last year's winner, the University of Maryland). This year's schedule features Springfield College, Boston College (defending State Division I champions), and Coach Marasco's old school, Yale University.

Last year, UMass compiled a 20-12-2 record under Mike Rhodes, while the JVs racked up a 7-1 slate. Among the premier players of last year were co-captains Joyce Gresl, Peggy Barber, and Pat McGrath, Ellen Braun, and Brenda Simmons.

With only a week (though according to Coach Marasco UMass has been practicing over the past week) to assemble and practice before the opener and a rough schedule ahead, Marasco—the third coach in four years—faces a tough challenge ahead.

Sweet named All-American

Three months after the UMass men's lacrosse team lost to Navy in the USILA playoffs, word came about the All-American selections from the University of Virginia. UMass standout Brooks Sweet made the first team on attack while two members of the Gorillas were given honorable mentions: Norm Smith and Ed Murray, both midfielders.

Unranked at mid-season, these three helped the Minutemen to defeat important teams like Army; they gave coach Dick Garber his 200th career victory - a feat attained by few - and a spot in the Top 15 squads of Division I.

NCAA champion John Hopkins of Baltimore led the first-team selections with ten players, while Maryland had eight. Navy was next with six selections; Cornell had five. 27 teams shared a total of 84 selections.

NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

Sox error proves costly

NEW YORK (AP) — An error by second baseman Ted Sizemore on a potential double-play ball allowed Willie Randolph to score from second base in the eighth inning last night as the New York Yankees defeated the Red Sox, 3-2.

With one out, Randolph chopped a ground ball double into left field. Oscar Gamble walked and Reggie Jackson then hit a medium-speed ground ball to the right of Boston shortstop Rick Burleson. Burleson threw to Sizemore at second base in the eighth inning last night as the New York Yankees defeated the Red Sox 3-2.

With one out, Randolph chopped into left field. Oscar Gamble walked and Reggie Jackson then hit a medium-speed ground ball to the right of Boston shortstop Rick Burleson. Burleson threw to Sizemore at second, forcing Gamble. But Sizemore's relay to first baseman Bob Watson was low and to the right. Watson was unable to handle the ball cleanly and Randolph scored on the play.

Luis Tiant, 11-8, pitched eight innings for New York, allowing only two runs and three hits. Rich Gossage picked up his 13th save by working the ninth.

Boston opened the scoring in the third inning when Butch Hobson homered in the right field stands, his 24th of the season. The Red Sox scored again in the sixth when Tom Poquette and Jim Rice both doubled.

Mike Torrez, 14-10, lost for the eighth time in nine decisions against his former Yankee teammate. Torrez had a 2-0 lead entereing the seventh when Reggie Jackson singled and Chris Chambliss followed with his 16th home run.

Tiant used only 19 pitches to retire the first six Red Sox hitters before Hobson opened the third with his homer. One out later, Gary Allenson was safe on a fielding error by third baseman Graig Nettles.

After Rick Burleson fouled out, Allenson stole second and Dwight Evans walked. But Tiant retired Poquette on an infield grounder.

After retiring nine hitters in a row, Tiant gave up a checked swing double to Poquette and Rice's long drive that eluded Jackson against the right field wall for an RBI double.

Tiant then retired the last seven Red Sox to face him and Gossage set down Boston in order in the ninth. Tiant evened his record against the Red Sox this season at 1-1, posted his 215th career victory and is now 11-10 against Boston in his career.

Monday night action

Patriots fall in overtime

by FRED BAYLES
Associated Press

FOXBORO, MASS. It was a "funny game" for Steeler quarterback Terry Bradshaw; a "disappointing, sad loss," to New England's new coach, Ron Erhardt.

But when the smoke finally settled in Monday nights' National Football League overtime extravaganza, Pittsburgh's 16-13 victory belonged to Matt Bahr.

After missing a crucial extra point in the second quarter and 43-yard field goal attempt in the third quarter, the rookie from Penn State redeemed himself with a 41-yard boot that gave the Super Bowl champs the game with 9:50 remaining in overtime play.

It was enough to leave the slight, soft-spoken place-kicker a little stunned.

"All the guys just said they had confidence in me and I just kept my head down and tried my best," Bahr said, following his debut in regular season NFL play.

His kick was dead-center despite a timeout called by the Patriots in an attempt to build the pressure on the rookie.

"Nobody's ever done that to me before," Bahr said. "I could hear the noise, but it just game me a little more time."

But if the game belonged to Bahr, the 60,978 fans belonged for a time to Darryl Stingley, the Patriots' former wide receiver who was paralyzed last year during a pre-season game in Oakland.

Stingley returned to Schaefer Stadium on Monday to accept a new job with the Patriots' executive director of player personnel—and a five minute standing ovation from fans who delayed the game for five minutes with applause and cheers.

New England scored on the first set of downs with a 4-yard pass from quarterback Steve Grogan to tight end Russ Francis. Pittsburgh fought back in the second quarter when Sidney Thornton ran in from the 2 yard line. Bahr failed on the conversion.

New England padded its lead with second quarter field goals of 31 and 32 yards from John Smith.

Then, with five minutes left, Thornton took a 21-yard pass from Bradshaw to tie the game in regular time.

"It was a funny game," said Bradshaw, who was hobbled with a sprained left toe. "The Patriots are a tough team. I'm glad to get out of here. You're not going to see me around here again."

Despite his sore toe, Bradshaw completed 15 of 26 attempts for 221 yards. Grogan made 11 of 33 for 123 yards.

"It was a disappointing, sad loss for us," said Erhardt, who was making his regular season debute as Patriots coach. "It's a shame that we played that hard and couldn't win.

"I don't think the Steelers are invincible and we would like to meet them again."

Winter heating oil plentiful, but expensive

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON - People who heat with oil should be able to get all the fuel they need this winter but will pay at least 50 percent more than they did a year ago, the Carter administration said yesterday.

"There may be many people in our country who will be faced this winter with a cruel choice between food or heat," departing Deputy Energy Secretary John F. O'Leary told a congressional panel.

O'Leary and other adminstration officials testified at a hearing into the status of U.S. heating oil supplies. The sesssion was held jointly by tow House energy subcommitttees.

The officials denied that the sale of 2 million barrels of kerosene and heating oil to Iran would noticeably affect U.S. supplies of these fuels or that the transaction constituted "blackmail."

And they diputed news reports indicating that Iran planned to resell the fuel at a profit.

"Iran will use every drop of that oil," State Department official Henry Precht asserted. Precht said reports to the contrary seemed aimed at home consumption in Iran and do not reflect the reality of the situation.

Earlier fears of a heating oil shortage this winter have been all but eliminated, said O'Leary, whose resignation as the nation's No. 2 energy official takes effect later this month.

"Industry is building stocks at a faster rate than last year," and President Carter's goal of having 240 million barrels of heating oil and diesel fuel in reserve by October will be met, he predicted.

However, O'Leary also testified that the price outlook is bleak.

"It is clear that there has been a significant increase in heating oil prices over last winter's level," he said.

O'Leary said the national average has already climbed to 80 cents per gallon, a 27-cent increase - or 51 percent rise - over the December 1978 price.

O'Leary's testimony coincided with the release of a new Library of Congress study which compared the current 80-cent per gallon price with last September's average price of 49 cents a gallon.

Of that total one-year increase, only 14.8 cents can be attributed to higher crude oil costs, the report alleged.

Thus, the industry has charged consumers som $1 billion more in higher prices than can be justified.

Legal action sought for library

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Henry Koffler and the University administration were yesterday directed by the UMass Board of Trustees to work with the UMass Building Authority and the State Attorney General to press claims against those responsible for building defects on campus.

In another motion, the trustees commended Koffler on his swift action in closing the library Friday following the report that it may present hazards to pedestrians.

The motions followed a two-day stay here of the board in which the trustees toured campus buildings which are suffering from structural and deferred maintenance problems.

The trustees were told of a report by Loomis and Loomis, Inc. of Windsor, Conn., which said bricks on the facade of the building are chipping and this is a sign of stress on the joints holding up 6,000 pounds of brick for every 30 square feet.

In a news conference Tuesday, Koffler described the problem as "the brick panels are attached to the concrete walls of the building in a manner that makes the whole facade unsafe."

the trustees were also told two other engineering consulting firms, Agnoli, Inc., of Longmeadow and Gilbert Small Inc., of Boston, "tentatively, orally confirmed" the Loomis and Loomis findings, news bureau spokesman Art Clifford said.

Trustee Haskell Kassler, chair of the Committee on Buildings and Grounds, directed Koffler to "work with the B.B.C. (the Bureau of Building Construction) and other state agencies."

As part of the tour findings, Kassler also said, "There are some good buildings on campus of which we are most proud."

Kassler agreed many of the buildings are in need of repair, but said, "We are to a great extent totally without the ability to control our own destiny in some of those buildings.

"We do not have the funds to repair all of the buildings which need repair," he said.

He also said, "The University of Massachusetts does not have the legal capacity to do with those buildings as we would wish," in his report to the trustees on planning for repair.

The trustees also voted to "call upon the UMass Building Authority and other appropriate state agencies, including the Executive Office and Legislature, to take immediate steps to provide the University with the financial resources necessary to remedy the devective conditions existing in the Amherst buildings."

The board also voted to direct the University staff to work with the UMass Building Authority and the Attorney General to press claims vigorously agianst any and all parties responsible for these defects."

Of the buildings which need repair due to vandalism, Chairman Joseph P. Healy warned that the campus must take measures to decrease campus vandalism. "It's not a matter of putting those buildings in shape and having them vandalized again," he said.

A presentation on the Campus Center garage was also made to the trustees by students from the Campus Center Board of Governors regarding the condition of the garage. The facility is currently uncer investigation by the Special Commisssion Concerning State and County BUildings, known as the Ward COmmisssion, named for is chair, former Amherst College President William Ward.

The library has been suffering from falling chips of brick for six years Clifford said. It was completed in 1973 at a cost of $16.5 million, and was constructed by Daniel O'Connell's Sons of Holyoke. C.E. Naguire served as the design engineer, and Edward Durrell Stone was the architecht.

Trustees approve UMass budget

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees approved yesterday a $278 million fiscal year 1980 operating budget.

The trustees were here Tuesday and Wednesday touring campus buildings and meeting with students and administrators.

The trustees also approved the appointment of Samuel Conti as Dean of the Graduate School. (see related article, p. 3)

UMass President David C. Knapp said 46.5 percent of the budget requested was aimed for non-academic programs. They included funds for student financial aid, support for the University Hospital in Worcester, the University administration offices, library and equipment purchases and the Institute for Governmental Services.

Utilities, educational supplies and maintenance and equipment expenses accounted for another 28.5 percent of the shortfall, Knapp said.

The total operating budget is expected to be up 10.9 percent, Knapp said, while state support for the UMass budget increased by only 3.8 percent.

"It is a tight budget, forcing us to make many difficult and painful choices and to put off maintenance and replacement of our plant and equipment," Knapp said.

"But we have chosen to maintain the quality of our educational programs and invest our limited resources in which activities which directly advance our primary responsibility as an educational institution."

A $600 cost-of-living increase for University employees, effective October 1, and for merit and equity increases for faculty and professional staff are included in the budget, he said.

New efforts in University research, public service and development programs are expected to bring an increase in funds from outside sources, Knapp said, while improvements in administrative systems will result in better management of University resources.

The budget provides for the University's three three campus, 32,848 student system. The Amherst and Boston campuses are expected to experience a small growth in the upper division level, accompanied by small declines in lower division enrollments, Knapp said.

The new Ph.D program at Worcester will bring the first enrollment growth there in several years, while graduate enrollment is expected to increase slightly at Amherst and substantially at Boston, he said.

The trustees also approved the establishement of undergraduate majors in dance and in compute and information science.

They also favored the appointment of Houston Elam as professor of management with tenure and also as dean of the College of Professional Studies at UMass-Boston.

The trustees approved the exemption of Donald T.I Streets, associate professor of education, and Nelson Stevens, associate professor of Afro-American studies, of returning to the University upon completion of sabbatical leaves.

The board, appointed by the governor, is responsible for policy making at all three campuses of the University, and a multitude of other programs.

Sadat, Begin agree at talks

HAIFA, Israel AP - Anwar Sadat and Menachem Begin differed over the future of Jerusalem and reported no progress on the Palestinian question, but they reached agreement in summit talks yesterday on three immediate issues - Mount Sinai, peace-keeping patrols and oil.

Sadat, who arrived Tuesday on his third visit to Israel, planned a tour of this Mediterranean port city today before departing for home.

The Egyptian president and Israeli prime minister, ending two days of meetings, announced agreements "in principle" on an early Israeli evacuation fo the area of the biblical Mount Sinai and on the quantity of Sinai oil Egypt will sell Israel once it relinquishes the Suex Gulf wells.

They also worked out a temporary arrangement for Egyptian-Israeli supervision of Israel's return of the Sinai Peninsula to Egypt and inspection of forces, which under the tems of the too counties' peace treaty wete to have been the tasks of the U.N. Emergency Force stationed in the Sinai.

Dayan, Palestinians meet

HAIFA, Israel AP - Moshe Dayan has held at least eight meetings with Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and an aide said yesterday the controversial foreign minister would ocntiue to use such meetings in pursuit of Mideast peace.

Leaders of hawkish factions in the coalition government said only the current state visit here by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat was preventing a drive to chastise Dayan for his meetings with West Bank leaders, most of whom support Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization.

Dayan's personal crusade was in apparent direct oonflict with the policies of Prime Minister Manachem Begin, who has said Israel will never negotiate with the PLO.

Area pilot hurt in crash

LEE, Mass. (AP) - His clothing and aircraft on fire, a pilot climbed out of his light plane and tore off the burning garments after crashing in a field yesterday, eyewitnesses reported.

The pilot, identified by authorities as Francis Krumpski, 32, of South Deerfield, was listed in critical condition at Albany Medical Center in Albany, N.Y. with second and third degree burns.

Witnesses said the plane, which was seeding bare cornfields with winter rye, caught fire while airborne.

Northfield Aerial Applicators owns the plane, according to authorities.

The plane crashed on the Carrington Farm a mile south of Interchange No. 2 on the Massachusetts Turnpike.

Tragedy lingers on

Engulfed in flames, Crescent Beach Villas condominiums n North Mytle Beach burn out-of-control in the background, while firefighters attempt to save a beachhouse nearby. The fire apparently started in the By The Sea Motel, which was located between the house and the condos. It spread, spurred by high winds from Hurricane David's aftermath, first to the condos and then to the house. All 24 units of the condo were destroyed, along with the motel and the house.

David puts Mass. officials on alert for flooding

BOSTON, Mass – Forecasters have issued a flood watch and Massachusetts Civil Defense officials prepared for coastal flooding as a weakened tropical storm David staggered across the Carolinas toward New England.

"We're in an alert status and standing by should the situation worsen," said state Civil Defense Director Robert H. Cunningham. "Just because the word hurricane has been removed, we don't want the public to be lulled into a false sense of safety."

"We will be on alert all this evening and will activate emergency operation centers on the north and south shores of Boston after daybreak," he said yesterday.

Once a raging hurricane which killed some 900 people in the Dominican Republic late last week, David was downgraded to tropical storm status yesterday morning as it churned across North Carolina with winds of 50 mph.

But the storm still carried heavy showers which National Weather Service forecasters warned could swell New England streams and rivers by late yesterday.

Officials also worried about severe coastal flooding aggravated by tides more than two feet above normal.

s"It won't take too strong a wind to flood low-lying coastal areas for several hurs on either side of the high tides today," said meteorologist Anthony Tancreto.

Cunningham urged local officials in coastal communities to prepare emergency plans and ready equipment in the event of flooding. He also said homeowners in flood-prone areas should keep track of weather advisories.

While officials urged caution in connection with the storm, boat yards along the Massachusetts coast reported boat owners weren't particularly concerned.

"When we have predictions of bad storms we are deluged by owners who want their ships taken out of the water," said Joan Moss, a spokeswoman for the F.L. Tripp and Sons Inc. boat yard in Westport.

"So far we haven't received one call."

Trustees and students dine on veggies

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Over warm vichysssoise, crushed mushrooms and organic apple juice, University trustees yesterday took a respite from their busy two-day visit and talked to various student representatives at a luncheon in Memorial Hall. Earthfoods provided the fare and although life outside the hall was hectic -- what with the first day of classes and general concern over the library -- the environment inside was mellow and the lunchtime conversation casual.

"It's really amazing what can be done with the soybean," said John Callahan, spokesman for trustee Charles Johnson, as Callahan sampled the vegetarian menu.

Tofu or no tofu, trustee JaNET Owens, seated at a table with Callahan, Provost Jeremiah M. Allen and three students, maintained that UMass students today just do not possess the "awareness" they did when she attended the University in 1969.

"When I was in school, students didn't even care about getting their degrees. Everybody argued with everybody -- and learned a lot. It was great," Owens said, munching a whole wheat roll.

Students today are only concerned with filling requirements and getting a job -- instead of contemplating current issues, Owens observed.

However, argued diner Gwen Schirner of the Student Center for Advocacy and Research, "UMass has an awful reputation for being too liberal." At a United States Student Association conference held here last month, Schirner said, UMass student representatives favored affirmative action while nearly all of the 350 participants spoke against it.

And, Schirner said, conference participants form other schools did not understand why men should be barred form a student government women's caucus.

"But the guys from UMass were great. They got up and explained why."

"We're proud of our men," she said.

Planning Pope's visit a very trying task

BOSTON (AP) – The impossible task of coordinating the details of a papal visit – ranging from choice of routes to delayed flights – was evident yesterday as the Boston archdiocese held its first briefing on the Oct. 1 visit by Pope John Paul II.

"We're trying to handle the details one by one," said the Rev. William Helmick, who is coordinating the pope's visit to Boston.

"We have nothing very dramatic to report right now, but there are a million and one details to attend to," he said at the first of the weekly briefings.

Among the minutiae revealed at yesterday's meeting were the facts that:

– The pope is now scheduled toarrive in Boston at 3 p.m., a half-an-hour later than originally planned. The pope's other appearances, including a two-hour Mass at Boston Common, will be pushed back 30 minutes.

"I imagine the Irish want to hold onto him as long as they can," said the Rev. Paul White. The pope comes to Boston following a visit to Ireland.

– Fifty-seven prelates have been invited as concelebrants to the afternoon Mass, including the 10 cardinals of the United States, the Archbishop Jean Jadot, apostolic delegate in the United States, 27 bishops of New England and representatives of the 11 other regions of the Catholic church.

– Some 200 priests will be selected to offer communion to an estimated 175,000 persons who will be in the Common for the Mass.

– Secret Service officials and the Rev. Robert Lynch, the church's coordinator for the Pope's six-city U.S. tour, will test a variety of routes on Thursday to choose the path the papal motorcade will take in Boston.

– Helmick said the archdiocese favors "a broad route" to give more people a chance to see the pope, who will lead the 18-car motorcade in an open limousine on loan from President Carter.

The archdiocese also announced that it will take up a special collection on Sept. 15 and 16 in honor of Pope John II.

Board picks Conti as grad dean

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

"Obviously, I'm delighted," Samuel F. Conti, said last night after learning the trustees had appointed him Dean of the Graduate School.

Conti, who is currently on the University of Kentucky faculty, holds a Ph.D. in microbiology from Cornell University and is research director of the College of Allied Health Professions at the University of Kentucky.

"I'm impressed with Chancellor (Henry) Koffler," Conti said when asked about what attracted him to UMass. "He's been a professional acquaintance for years."

"He developed an outstanding department at Purdue," Conti said of Koffler, also a microbiologist.

Conti said he plans to help the University "move forward as the flagship of the University of Massachusetts system." Graduate education and research are an essential part of the University, he said.

"Graduate research will be of huge importance," he said.

When adked if he heard of the situation regarding the library, Conti said, "You mean the bricks falling down? I quess Dr. Koffler came, and in a month had a ton of bricks fall on him."

"This will show how good the administration is in times of crisis," he added.

Conti said he will be coming to the Amherst area with his wife and two of his three children. His son is a senior in high school. "Hopefully he will be admitted to the University of Massachusetts," Conti said.

Lesbian Union opens for semester

The Lesbian Union, located on the Campus Center's ninth floor, offers counseling and a variety of services to University and area women.

YThe union sponsors women's marches, concerts and facilitates dormitory lectures. According to Fran Ryan, coordinator of Speaker's Bureau, a lecture service, the talks focus on gay life in a straight world and other topics related to homosexuals.

"We try to provide a social and political atmosphere," Ryan said.

The office is open during the day, although hours are undetermined. Women are welcome to browse through the library office, containing feminist and lesbian periodicals to visit, to talk or have lunch.

Court upholds kickback conviction

BOSTON (AP) - Citing "a shocking betrayal of public trust," the state's high court has upheld the conviction of a former purchasing agent in an alleged kickback scheme involving the $15-million construction of Revere High School.

This week, the Supreme Judicial Court said that evidence showed David P. Borans, 39, "misused the power of his office to induce political contributions to the mayor William G. Reinstein.

"Borans also actively participated in two schemes to siphon funds from the Revere public treasury for the private gain of public officials," wrote Justice Ruth L. Abrams in a 49-page opinion.

Borans was sentenced by a superior court judge in October 1977 to six to nine years in state prison on 19 indictments charging him with larceny and perjury. He also was found guilty of inducing Belmont appraiser Jack Stone to commit perfury before a grand jury probing the school contracts.

Negotiations begin in TV, film industry

LOS ANGELES—Negotiators for 24,000 film craftsmen and technicians headed back to the bargaining table yesterday, armed with a strike mandate that could shut down the entire motion picture and television industry for the first time in 33 years.

With the fall television season about to get under way, network spokesmen said a prolonged walkout could mean that viewers expecting to find new programs would get mostly reruns instead.

Leaders of the seven unions involved in the wage dispute met during the morning to prepare for the afternoon session with the Motion Picture and Television Producers Association.

Members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and six smaller related unions voted 89 percent in favor of the strike mandate. The vote represented overwhelming rank-and-file support for a tough stand in bargaining for a new contract to replace one that expired July 31.

Should union leaders decide to call a strike, an actual walkout would probably not take place before Monday, since union rules require 48 hours notice to allow producers time to send location crews home.

The unions represent virtually all film crew members, from camera and soundmen to drivers, makeup and costume artists and film editors. A strike would halt production on all motion pictures and filmed television shows at a traditionally busy period.

Vermont to watch n-plant discharge

VERNON, Vt. (AP) - The Vermont Health Department will step up its monitoring of the Connecticut River this month to ensure that radioactive discharges from the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant are within state and federal safety limits.

The Vermont plant is discharging about 200,000 gallons of slightly radioactive water into the river as it drains its condensation storage tanks.

The amount of radioactive materials being dumped into the river is within the limits of the plant's water discharge permit, plant officials say.

But the Health Department said it will take extra samples from the river to ensure that the limits are being met.

The water is flowing into the river at the rate of about 10 gallons per minute, according to plant spokeswoman Stacey Weaver.

Miss Lillian begins re-election campaign

CONCORD, N.H.—Faced with a prospect of fighting unannounced presidential candidates, President Carter's re-election campaign may have averted an expected "anti-Carter blood bath" by sending the president's 81-year-old mother into the battle.

Miss Lillian will share the podium Sunday with California Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. and Dudley Dudley, leader of New Hampshire's growing campaign to prod Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy into the 1980 race.

State Democratic party leaders have called the Hillsboro County Democratic picnic "the real start of the Democratic presidential battle," and the gloves were expected to be taken off.

"It could have been the first anti-Carter blood bath of the season," said Raymond Buckley, an executive member of the state party. "With Jerry Brown making his first appearance and the Kennedy people fighting for recognition all hell could have broken loose."

The assignment of Miss Lillian to represent her son was the best choice the Carter people could have made, Buckley said.

"It's the first real stroke of campaign brilliance that the Carter campaign has shown," said Buckley. "This will just about kill the anti-Carter remarks and demonstrations that everyone expected to hear and see.

Reagan staff preps for 1980 campaign

HOOKSETT, N.H. (AP)—Former California Gov. Ronald Reagan will formally announce sometime around Nov. 1 that he will seek the Republican presidential nomination, Charles Black, Reagan's national political director said yesterday.

Black also said Reagan organizers plan a fundraiser in Boston for their candidate, tentatively scheduled for Nov. 2, which will feature Reagan, Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin.

Black said although Reagan has not officially announced that he is a presidential candidate, he is planning to make a "non-political" trip to New Hampshire in September.

Black made the statement just before he held a news conference announcing the new co-chairman of Reagan's state effort.

Black's statement came a week after dozens of grassroots Reagan supporters told The Associated Press that they feared Reagan's reluctance to announce might hurt his chances in New Hampshire's crucial primary.

Responding to questions about Reagan's late announcement, Black said "Before Jimmy Carter ran for president, there was never anything unusual about a candidate announcing late in the year before the primary."

Reagan's New Hampshire campaign chairman former Gov. Lane Dwinell achnowledged that some campaign workers were concerned.

"The people most impatient are the enthusiastic workers who want to see the candidate in the flesh. Our problem is to keep these enthusiastic people in harness," he said.

Black said the Reagan campaign has spent about $45,000 in the state since last March in salaries for what is now five political workers.

Last year three UMass students were awarded Fulbrights: Judith Nydon, Anthropology, Bolivia; Shirley Gedeon, Economics, Yugoslavia; Jeffrey Cole, History, Bolivia.

There will be an important orientation meeting for seniors and graduate students interested in applying for these grants on Tuesday, September 11 at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor lounge in Herter Hall. At that time, details of the programs will be explained and application materials distributed.

Deadlines for all of these grants are in early or mid-October, so that students should be sure to attend this orientation meeting or make immediate contact with Maryelise or Sterling Lamet, 239 Whitmore, 5-0746 (Rhodes, Marshall, Luce) or Nina Scott, 421 Herter, 5-0544 (Fulbright-Hays, ITT).

When the chips are down

The library could be closed for the semester, maybe a year.

The chancellor hasn't said it. The UMass News Bureau hasn't released that information. The Trustees might not know it. But based on reports, it could happen.

The consulting firm which investigated the collapse of the Hartford Civic Center just hours after a UMass basketball game, Loomis and Loomis of Windsor, Conn., has deemed the situation crucial. In a report released last week, they concluded that certain joints responsible for holding 6000 pounds of brick each can't handle the load. Although only chips currently are falling from the library, they are a warning. A warning that the worst is yet to come. A seven year warning which has only been recently heeded.

Two other consulting firms, John Agnoli from Longmeadow and Gilbert Small & Co. from Boston, agree with the Loomis and Loomis reports.

The administration is to be commended for their actions. Their close-down decision, following a thorough investigation, and foremost consideration of the UMass community's safety, is reassuring, to say the least.

What in effect the three consulting firms have decided is that 6000 pounds of red brick could topple down any time.

The ongoing process of official debate concerning the library's future has reached a difficult point. Weighing the level of danger against the obvious hinderance to the educational process of the University is a perplexing dilemma.

Options such as traficing students through the South College tunnel entrance are being considered, as well as movement of books here and there.

The situation is still very much up in the air.

Thank God the library is too, for now.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

JACK GALLAGHER

Chaos is catching

There is control and there is chaos.

Control is staying abreast of Master Charge; being an upstanding citizen and avoiding nuclear profileration.

Chaos is owing Master Charge your wife and children, being a three-time loser and dropping the "big one."

But there are different degrees of control and chaos: chaotic control, controlled chaos and Italy.

Those three degrees of control, however, are all exercised in the same place: that country across the seas which our geography teachers told us was shaped like a boot. Therefore, Italy has lost control in the hope, one might imagine, of gaining control.

The U.S. may be bad: unemployment, inflation, energy. But Italy is worse: knee-cap shootings, coups, anarchy.

But there are enticing things about the boot-shaped country: a lack of nuclear bombs and an abundance of strong-will citizens.

Of course, there are many possible reasons for this phenomenon: lack of technology, money, leaders. Or perhaps no one in Italy cares for bombs.

However, chaos is catching; control is not. This means there are no gradations between control and chaos. There is only chaos.

No one watches "Father Knowns Best" anymore, in the U.S. or Italy. No one cares about the SALT II talks; not in the U.S. and certainly not in Italy. And no one seems to care about a Middle East settlement, except U.S. editorial writers and Andrew Young.

However, the biggest talk of all that exudes from the Middle East is from OPEC, not from Moshe Dayan.

Chaos, therefore, is catching. One opens a newspaper and reads of the Klu Klux Klan, the hawks and doves out on a limb, the changing of the Italian government, the U.S. trade deficit.

However, though there is no distinction between chaos and control, there is the world-wide problem of anarchy.

Chaos is accepted as a way of life in the Western world, as well as in China. But anarchy is despised: A confessed anarchist is, at best, hard to take at an anti-nuclear rally or at a Master Charge office.

(All the anarchist does is tear things down. The chaoticist, meantime, tries neither to tear things down nor build things up.)

In Italy, the upstanding citizen is the chaoticist, a long-standing tradition, while in the U.S. the upstanding citizen is he who owes Master Charge a "healthy" amount of money.

However, Watergate, "60 Minutes," Jack Anderson and the General Services Administration contribute to chaos in the U.S. None of these exist in Italy, however, because the country does not need them. There is no government there; only "Bonanza" reruns, but certainly no typewriter-theft scandals.

Therefore, the U.S. is behind Italy's boot, though the former has a large stockpile of nuclear armaments. Italy is the trend-setter of the chaotic while the U.S. is only beginning to familiarize itself with chaos.

In the U.S., control has gone the way of the Pepsi generation, from the present tense to past nonsense.

However, while the U.S. crowds to the out-of-vogue Pepsi shelves across its teeming shores, talk continues in the Middle East—coolly on settlement, hotly on crude oil.

Therefore, the Pepsi drinker is confined, by the limitations of energy, to the fleeting fizzing contents of the carbonated beverage, while OPEC meets, daily it seems, to raise the price of precious crude.

Then, due to the machinations of supply and demand, while Pepsi continues to be consumed, crude oil prices increase, causing imports to exceed exports.

And when imports exceed exports, stockpiles of consumer goods increase, causing employers to lay off workers. This is known as unemployment.

But neither the feeling-free Pepsi generation nor Italy is to blame.

If the U.S. had not followed in the footsteps of the country that is shaped like a boot, however, there would be no energy shortages, inflationary spirals or unemployment lines—because chaos is catching.

Therefore, Andrew Young would be the slayer of OPEC, not the purveyor of peace for the Palestinians, Italy would be the instigator and Curtis Lemay would be the bombardier.

However, there can be no side-stepping of the problems.

However, no one is at fault.

However, should New York City be blown up. . .

However, inflation is worse.

However,. . .

Jack Gallagher is slighty confused.

Some union workers vote to strike at BU

BOSTON AP - Clerical and technical workers at Boston University voted to stike yesterday, flowing a morning of fruitless bargaining over money issues with administration officials.

The 218-50 vote to strike affects some 850 employees at the nation's fifth largest private university, where classes are set to begin today for some 25,000 studeents.

A BUU official reported that the workers had struck, but that could not be confirmed with their loabor organization, District 65 of the Wholesale, Retail and Processing Union.

Union offi ials foolwed the afternoon vote with a call for binding arbitration on all unresolved areas. But BU officials rejected that.

"Our position is that we regret they're out," said Robert C. Bergenheim, BU vice president for public and labor relations. "This is a nuisance-type of strike that doesn't affect the school operation at all.

"This thing the labor dispute went long enough so registration and the beginning of school is 99 percent completed."

Union and administration negotiators met with a federal mediator yesterday morning in a n attempt to head off the strike. The meeting ended around noon and a strike vote was held a short time later at the school's Marsh Chapel.

Bergenheim reported the union was seeking an incrrease in both wages and fringe benefits.

On Tuesday, some 250 District 65 members followed union recommendations and rejected an offer made by BU, and a short while later gave their leadership authority to call astrike.

BU had refuse to negotiate with the union until May, after union members walked out in sympathy with striking faculty and five months after the National Labor Relations Board approved it as a bargaining agent.

Bergenheim said the union originally asked for a 118 percent increase in wages, frringes and benefits in the first year of a proposed two-year contract, but later lowered the demand to 35 percent.

"The university," Bergenheim siad, "started at six and went all the way to seven per ent." The average hourly rate for the workers is $4.90, he said.

Details of the second year were not worked out in the original contract offer, he said.

Utility plants urge feds to ease pollution standards

BOSTON AP - Four more utility plants have joined a campaign urging federal relaxation of air pollution standards in Massachusetts.

The four plants, all Boston-area facilities owned by Boston Edison Co., want permission to burn oil with a highter sulfur content than presently allowed.

Last month, New England Power Co. submitted a similar request so that electi generating units at it s Salem Harbor and Brayton Point plants can switch form low sulfur oil to highter sulfur coal.

The new request involves the Mystic electic generating plant in Evverett and the L Street plant in South Boston, as well as the Kneeland Street and Minot Street steam plants in Boston.

A hearing on BOston 'edison's request will be held tomorrow morning at the Statehouse's Gardner Auditorium.

Under federal law, the president can relax ssiar purity rules for four months if he dècieees a ntional or regional "energy emergency" exists. The emergency must either pose a threat to fuel supplies for homes or else jeopardize numerous jobs.

Both requests havethe backing of the King administration. The state The state Energy Office expects to forward New England Power's request to the federal government by mid-September and the Boston Edizon request by early October.

Last winter, a similar attempt to have President Carter relax air purity standards was rejected after the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency advised against it.

If Boston Edison has its way, its four plants would be allowed to burn oil with a 2.2 percent sulfur content. The two electic plants currently burn 1 percent sulfur oil, while the steam units operate with 0.5 percent sulfur oil.

When burned, sulfur turns into sulfur dioxide, a gas that, if storn enough, caa cause breathing problems. It sometimes combines with rain to produce diluted sulfuric acid, which environmentalists blame for damage to vegetation, water supplies and building exteriors.

A dying David pours rain over Carolinas

By DAVID L. LANGFORD
Associated Press

The fearsome winds of a storm called David dwindled to a stiff breeze driving heavy rains yesterday in the rolling hills of the Piedmont region of the Carolinas.

But in the islands of the Caribbean they were still counting their dead, buildings lay in shambles on Florida shores and scenic Savannah, Ga., was cluttered with thousands of felled oak trees.

The storm was one of the worst in the Atlantic this century. It killed at least 900 persons in a sweep through Dominica, Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic and left millions of dollars in damage when it side-swiped Florida.

At nightfall Tuesday, it smashed ashore again with full hurricane force near Savannah and spent its fury over gentle farmland and timber country.

At 12 noon EDT Wednesday, the storm was centered near latitude 35.0 north, longitude 80.5 west, or just east of Charlotte, N.C., the largest city in the Carolinas. Gale warnings were up from Savannah to Chincoteague, Va.

The top winds were clocked at 45 to 50 mph in a few squalls along the coast and over the water east of the center of the storm.

Weather officials warned the storm could unleash a few tornadoes and flash flood watches were posted in parts of North Carolina, Virginia and Maryland.

One tornado, perhaps spawned in David's system, touched down in Crofton, Md., overturning several automobiles and ripping the roofs from an undetermined number of buildings, according to Linda Dove, a fire department spokesman in Anne Arundel County. There were no reports of injuries.

But in the words of Charlotte policeman Phil Bryan, "It's just a rountine rainy day. We have a lot of rain and a little wind."

To the south in the old seacoast city of Savannah, officials were toting up the damage from the thousands of trees and utility poles, blocking the scenic streets lined with antebellum homes.

About 60,000 of Savannah Electric and Power Co.'s 86,000 customers were without electricity.

Georgia Gov. George Busbee toured the Savannah area by helicopter Wednesday and said later, "Very frankly, there was not the property damage I had anticipated."

In Florida, officials estimated damage to property along the Atlantic beaches at more than $60 million, mostly in wrecked mobile hmes, de-roofed houses, ruined furniture and spoiled citrus crops.

In the Dominican Republic, Civil Defense Director Pedro Justiniano Polanco said the estimated number of deaths caused by Hurricane David had increased to 900, including about 400 persons who were in an emergency shelter that was washed away. Another 300 persons were missing and 3,000 were counted as injured.

The exact number who died in that island country may never be known, Justiniano said. Many unidentified corpses were buried for health reasons as soon as they were found.

A WIREBOUND NOTEBOOK

POINTS TO CONSIDER

PAPER WEIGHT is the paper heavy enough for the writing instrument you intend to use and heavy enough to withstand repeated page turning without tearing. SIZE are the dimensions of the notebook suited to your needs and does it have enough sheets for all your notes. COVER make sure it will withstand some moisture for when you get caught in the rain or when you spill your experiment on it and be sure the cover is stiff enough to write on it when you're caught without a desk. BINDING do you want it bound on the left (standard) or on the top. make sure that the wire is a good thick steel designed to prevent uncoiling and snagging. RULING do you want college (standard) ruling, narrow or wide. also look at the ruling; is it straight, dark, and unbroken. OTHER consider if you want pockets for loose sheets and if you need perforated sheets that tear out cleanly. PRICE make sure you are getting a good value but don't shop by price alone.

we have all our wirebound notebooks made to our specifications taking the above factors into consideration. so, when you go shopping for a notebook you can either take the list above or you can come to your university store where we've done it for you. a full selection is available at the university store in the campus center and some of the more popular styles are at the textbook annex and the union news and sweet shop.

What Do You Want From College?
Job Opportunity? Add It To Your Schedule.

College is a time of high promise and even greater expectations.

You eagerly look forward to the day when you will have completed your education and are ready to get on with a career in your particular field.

However, many will not be ready.

In these highly competitive times, young people quite often find that a college education is simply not enough. An important ingredient is missing.

Employers know what it is.

They look for people trained in the human relationships of management and in the exercise of responsibility. Another name for this is leadership. Today, many companies are finding this preferred quality among men and women who are Army ROTC graduates.

The reason is basic.

ROTC classes are unique. They offer instruction and a practical, working knowledge of leadership. What you learn in Army ROTC training is directly applicable to a civilian career: the principles of personnel management, a ready acceptance of responsibility, the desire to achieve, and personal confidence.

There is a difference in the college graduate who has had the benefit of Army ROTC. That difference makes you worth more to prospective employers.

Mahaffey to defend title

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

SUTTON, Mass. – Defending champion John Mahaffey and seven other former winners in this scenic central Massachusetts town top a field set to start Thursday in the $250,000 Pleasant Valley Golf Classic.

Joining Mahaffey in a bid to become the first two-time winner here since the PGA made its first stop in 1965 are Tommy Shaw, Dave Stockton, Ray Floyd, Bruce Devlin, Lanny Wadkins, Roger Maltbie and Brian Allin.

Other leading contenders in the field include U.S. Open Champion Hale Irwin, Ben Crenshaw, the 1976 runner-up who made his pro debut on a Pleasant Valley exemption six years ago, and Bruce Lietzke, the year's ninth leading money winner with earnings of $176,822.

Tom Watson, a perennial visitor, passed up the tournament because his wife was expecting their first child. Watson leads all money winners with a whopping $447,636.

Wadkins and Crenshaw are fifth and sixth, respectively, among 1979 money winners. Wadkins has collected $191,650 in official money; Crenshaw $189,549.

Mahaffey, who surprised the golf world by winning the PGA championship and then Pleasant Valley one week apart in 1978, set a course record of 270 for 72 holes last year, collecting $45,000. He has been inconsistent this year, but ranks 55th with more than $63,000 won.

Floyd, 22nd with $120,000 earned on the current tour, is returning to one of his favorite courses. He is Pleasant Valley's all-time top money winner with $91,685, including $50,000 for his one-stroke victory over Jack Nicklaus in 1977.

YOUR EDUCATION DOESN'T STOP HERE

Your education doesn't stop with a baccalaureate degree. It begins there. Once you enter the world of work, you will gain valuable experience and really discover what it's all about to use what you learned in college.

Take the Air Force for example. As a commissioned officer you'll be handled executive responsibility, on your very first job. You'll manage people and complex systems. You'll be expected to perform well, and you'll be paid well, too. It's worth working for.

You can get there through the Air Force ROTC program. In fact, we have a scholarship plan that will net you $100 a month tax free and pay for all tuition, books and lab fees. And that will free you to concentrate on your studies, so you can get well prepared for where you're headed.

Check it out. Find out how you can get into a "graduate" program like the Air Force. It's a great way to serve your country, and possibly, find your formal education extended at Air Force expense as well.

AIR FORCE ROTC
Gateway to a great way of life.

There are better ways to handle a tough semester of math.

Choose the Texas Instruments calculator that's right for your major.

When you're working in a specialized field, you need a specialized calculator. That's why Texas Instruments designed the Slimline Business Analyst-II™ for business and finance . . . and the Slimline TI-50™ for science and math. Each provides the tailored power and the reliability you'll need as you learn to solve the problems you'll face as a professional. And each has a price you'll appreciate as a student.

Slimline* Business Analyst-II. Sleek LCD calculator with versatile business capabilities.

Solving financial problems with the Slimline Business Analyst-II can make working with your old calculator seem like pencil-and-paper arithmetic. The functions required to perform many common business, financial and statistical calculations are built in to help you make quick, accurate evaluations of many complex business situations.

Special financial keys are used to handle time and money problems such as compound interest, annuity payments, mortgage loans, investment yields, amortization schedules and more.

Statistical and linear regression capabilities provide the power you'll need to boil down data and automatically handle problems such as sales and earnings forecasts.

Profit margin calculations concerning cost, selling price and margin can be performed rapidly when any two of the variables are known. Other features include a four-function data register with Constant Memory™ feature that retains its contents even when the calculator is turned off. Two miniature batteries provide up to two years of operation in normal use. And TI's APD™ automatic power down feature helps prevent accidental battery drain.

The Business Analyst-II, with detailed owner's manual and suede-look vinyl wallet with pockets for notes, $45.00*.

The Slimline TI-50 packs 60 powerful functions into a handsome, compact package.

The pocket-portable Slimline TI-50 is a remarkably powerful LCD slide-rule calculator. Yet it's as thin as a pencil and weighs only three ounces!

Its 60 versatile functions can help you handle a wide range of college math problems. Capabilities include common and natural logarithms. Six trigonometric operations that can be performed in three angular modes (degrees, radians or grads). Two constant memories that retain their contents even when the calculator is turned off. And more.

Seven built-in statistical functions simplify the task of boiling down large sets of data points so you can perform accurate analyses and draw reliable conclusions.

The power of the Slimline TI-50 is made easy to use by TI's AOS™ algebraic operating system, which provides 15 sets of parentheses and accepts up to four pending operations. That means you can enter most problems just as they're written, left to right.

Two miniature batteries provide up to two years of normal operation. And TI's APD™ automatic power down feature helps prevent accidental battery drain.

The Slimline TI-50 includes a detailed owner's manual and a durable vinyl wallet, $40.00*.

Make sure your next calculator has the specialized power to handle the problems unique to your major. See the Business Analyst-II and the Slimline TI-50 at your college bookstore or other TI dealer today.

Pirates reserve sparks club

By GARY MIHOCES
Associated Press Writer

PITTTSBURGH - Dale Berra aims to play like a minor leaguer now that he's back in the majors.

"I'm taking things like it's Triple-A ball," said Berra, who has hit tow homers and played solid shortstop since the Pittsburgh Pirates recalled him Saturday from their Portland, Ore., farm team.

"I was too nervous and jitterry before. I was running out there like a chicken with its head cut off," he said.

"Now, I'm just trying to relax. That's what I did naturally in Triple-A, and I sshould apply it here."

Berra, whose Hall of Famer father Yogi wasn't the nervous type, began this season with Pittsburgh. But he was sent to the minors July 1 after batting .196 with one homer ant two RBIs in 92 at-bats.

"My shoulder was up, my bat was too close to my body, I was trying to pull ecerything," he recalled. "I just wasn't anything like the hitter I can be."

But he relaxed at Portland and hit .325 in 55 games. "The hits just came," he said.

Since rejoining Pittsburgh, he has started at shortstop in place of injured Tim Foli, and Pittsburgh has won four of five games in that span.

In the second game, of Labor Day doubleheader wwith Philadelphia, he hit a solo homer to center and rove in a total of three runs in Pittsburgh's 7-3 victory.

"Berra's homer ignited us," said Manager Chuck Tanner. "I have a lot of confidence in him. He's going to be super player when he gets experience."

If the Pirates make the National League playoffs, it's also unlikely Berra will be on the roster.

Because of league rules, the Pirates were unable to recall him soon enough for him to bbe eligible - unless another player is injured.

Meamwhile, his future here is also uncertain. Beyond Foli, the Pirates also have fielders Phil Garner, Bill Madlock and Rennie Stennett.

"I really don't know what will happen," said Berra. "I could get sent down again next spring. But if you do well, you won't get sent down. And for me to do well, I just have to relax and take things as they come."

NBA's first woman player

Meyers signs with Pacers

By JACK STEVENSON
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES—Former UCLA and Olympic star Ann Meyers became the first woman ever signed to a National Basketball Association contract yesterday when the Indiana Pacers announced that she has agreed to a one-year pact.

To play, the 24-year-old, 5-foot 9-inch, 140-pound feminine star must make the roster, but even if she doesn't, owner Sam Nassi said she will have some type of non-playing job for the Pacers.

Many members of the media asked during a news conference if the signing of Meyers was just a publicity gimmick, and she consistently answered:

"I'm serious about it. Many think that it is a gimmick, but I think I've been given a chance of a lifetime. I think that chance exceeded the chance of playing again in 1980 on the U.S. Olympic team."

She was a member of the silver-medal winning U.S. team at Montreal in 1976. By signing, she gives up her amateur status.

Meyers' brother, Dave, a former All-American at UCLA, plays for the Milwaukee Bucks. She said he told her he was a little disturbed by the decision "and the whole family was concerned whether I might get hurt."

Ann has scrimmaged in pickup games with star players of the NBA and said, "This is a challenge. I know it is unusual, but I've had dreams all of my life. It is unreal, but something that I have wanted."

Nassi didn't reveal the terms of the contract but said there were bonuses involved for making the team, time played and "other considerations."

Nassi said, "I think women have proven successful in sports. Conceptionally, this will be very exciting. At this point I haven't given any thought to any other job for her."

Pacers Coach Bobby Leonard, consulted prior to the signing, said, "I searched my soul, and asked if I could deny this person the opportunity to play basketball."

She will report Sept. 10 to the team's free agent-rookie camp before the veterans report Sept. 14.

NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien wished Meyers luck n her bid to become the first woman player in the league, and said, "The NBA does not discriminate against athletes on any basis, including sex. If and when a contract is filed with the league office by Indiana, it will be reviewed in the ordinary course and approved if it meets normal NBA requirements.

Asked what locker arrangements would be made or Meyers, Leonard grinned and said, "She'll be just one of the guys."

Spikers prepare to host Warsaw squad

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Former Yale coach Elaine Marasco is currently looking for players who can face the Warsaw Volleyball Club. The architect of the powerful women's volleyball team at Yale, Marasco is tudying the skills of those just finishing trvouts this week at NOPE gym.

"We need specialists," said Marasco, "people who can spike well, dig, set; anyone who can work on a deep attack or defense. Also, I plan to use two players who are good overall players as a "core". I wish I could find six people who can play fantastically overall, for Warsaw is an excellent team, but I think the potential and talent are here; I think I can find the players for a good team."

There are two major obstacles facing Coach Marasco: time (for they begin the season next Tuesday night), and the Warsaw Academy team itself. The Warsaw Volleyball Club is comprised of the best players in Poland; some have played in international competition (such as the European Club Cup). Coached by a woman running the club for 24 years, many players have graduated from the Academy of Physical Education; their average age is 25 years. Average height runs about 175 cm. (about six feet), with the extremes being form 171 cm. to 181 cm. (roughly 6' 5"). Among the players on the club include Roneta Skop (the tallest player), Elizabeta Lizinczk (considered by Marasco to generate the best offense on the team), and K. Kaczynska, a member of the Polish national team.

In preparation for the Academy match, Marasco has ordered double sessions of practice over the weekend. Also, UMass will travel to Westfield State College this Saturday for a scrimmage against Providence College and Springfield College.

Of her two years at Yale University, Marasco siad, "The volleyball program did more in two years than we ever could dream." In those two years, Marasco transformed a new program into a regional power: the first year saw Yale seded sixth in the regionals; after upsetting several top teams, Yale finally went down, short of Nationals. Year two was even better, as Yale became the Ivy League champions, and were seded first in regional competition.

Marasco decided to leave Yale because "I needed a change. After seeing Yale become a strong, competitive team, I decided to come to UMass, where I saw so much potential in the players here."

The Warsaw Academy men's team will play the UMass men's volleyball club at NOPE Tuesday night. Like their women counterparts, the men have experience in national competition. Many are students or graduates of the Academy; they average in their early 20s, with the oldest being 31. THe tallest player stands at 191 cm. -- well over seven feet tall.

Said men's team member Orlando Larracuente, "It'll be a good chance to get ready for the upcoming season (in a few months).

The Warsaw Volleyball Club is currently on tour, with Rutgers, George Washington University, Pittsburgh, US Naval Academy, and UMass on its schedule.

Library closing angers MSP; input demanded

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) angrily charge last night that the administrations refusal to involve faculty in the decision to close the library may violate a union contract clause on working conditions.

MSP president Jules Chametxky said the union is proposing the immediate formation of a faculty liaison group to work with the administration on any further action regarding the library.

A union press release issued yesterday said, "The MSP feel deep concern at the secretive way in which the administration decided to close the library giving faculty,, staff and students little or no notice of this fundamental change in their working condidtions"

The release also said classes, graduate and faculty research and governmnet funding of grants are threatened by the library closing.

Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen refused comment last night on the MSP reaction. Both Chancellor Henry Koffler and Vice-Chancellor Dennis L. Madson are out of town and could not be reached.

The decision to close the library Tuesday by the newly appointed chancellor followed a report by Loomis and Loomis, of Windsor, Conn., which said falling brick chips from the 300 foor building posed a safety hazard to pedestrians.

According tot he report, the joints suppochinv hhs 6000 pound brick panels attached to the concrete library walls are only meant to support 4800 pounds which makes the building unsafe.

The MSP release indicated the safety factor in the decision to close the building was not at issue. "We share the general concern for the safety of he campus and have given such matters priority in our bargaining," the release said.

Chametzky said the MSP was notified 15 minutes before the formal announcement of the closing on Tuesday although he administration had the Loomis report before the Labor Day weekend. A fence was erectsf closing the library on Friday.

"Earlier consultation with faculty would have resulted in more orderly planning,,' Chametzky saic.

Book removal plans halted

Plans to provide limited access to the main library nf mmvs 250,000 of the most frequently circulated bocks through an underground tunnel have been aborted for a while the Deputy Social Director of Public Services at the library said yesterday.

George Wright said present condidtions of he building would make any movement towards it a hazard.

"We're aren't talking about u couple of bricks chipping off," Wright said, "we're talking abut two or three tons."

According tc Wright, event he underground tunnel running from South College, to the library beneath the surrounding stone platform, would be vulnerable to such a load.

University and library officials are awaiting further engineering reports on what steps

David splashes, cuts power, ties traffic

Associated Press

Hurricane David's remains spewed torrents of rain on Massachusetts yesterday, causing at least one death, scattered power outages and midday traffic tie—ups as the storm's center sideswiped the state's western fringes.

The remnants of the once—powerful hurricane dumped between one and three inches of rain on the state, causing street flooding in many areas.

Antonio Vricella, 33, of Somerville, died in Massachusetts General Hospital after his vehicle skidded on a wet Charlestown street and struck a light pole, said Boston Police Officer Philip O'Connell. "It was definitely due to the downpour," said O'Connell.

Hardest hit was Massachusetts Electric Co., reporting some 30,000 customers without electricity in Great Barrinton, Lowell, Lawrence, Gardner and Hopedale.

Western Massachusetts Electric also reported outages n Pittsfield, Springfield, Greenfield and Montague.

In Boston, sheets of rain swept through during the mid—day hours, causing major traffic tie—ups on several arteries and temporarily halting trolley service on parts of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's Green Line.

But communitities like Revere and Scituate, where flooding is usually a problem during major storms, reported no problems.

Van Morrison to be UPC opener at FAC

By DAVID ROUTHIER
Collegian Staff

Van Morrison, one of the lasting forces in popular music over the last two decades, will seek to prove that he is "still around" when he opens this year's Union Program Council concert series on October 3.

The Fine Arts Center Auditorium wll rock to the sounds of Morrison's classic tunes, like "Gloria" and "Brown-Eyed Girl," but his musical vision has resulted in some 16 albums, released over the last 15 years.

The Wednesday concert is scheduled to begin at 8 p.m., but the opening act is still undecided, Art Edelstein of the Council said.

Tickets are general admission and will go on sale at TIX, Union Records Unlimited and all Ticketron outlets on September 17. Admission price is $7 for students and $8 for the general public.

The Morrison concert is the latest in a series of moves by the Council to bring big-name acts to the University. Last year's Spring Concert, which featured the Grateful Dead, and this summer's Rickie Lee Jones concert are fine examples.

"The UPC is completely student-run," said Darlene Lorkiewicz, publicity and advertising chairperson. "It's students who book the bands, do all the preliminary and advertising work, and set the stage," she said.

Morrison's appeal has successfully spanned two decades, since he first came to American attention in 1964. As a member of the Irish group "Them," Morrison's vocals on the now legendary "Gloria" reeived national acclaim.

In 1966 Van disbanded the group in order to pursue a solo career. A year later, his spectacular "Brown Eyed Girl" reached the top five of the U.S. charts.

In 1968 Morrison signed with Warner Bros. Records, the label under which he released his Moondance album. With such tunes as "Caravan" and "Into the Mystic," Morrison was once again propelled into the public eye.

Throughout the last ten years Morrison has released as many albums, with varying degrees of commercial success. But his innovative experimentation wth differing musical styles won him much critical acclaim.

His latest album, Into the Music, was recently released and it features nine original tunes. His current three-week European tour concluded on September 1 and his appearance at UMass will be part of an extensive American tour planned for this fall.

Morrison is contracted to perform for a standard set which lasts about 60-75 minutes, Edelstein said. "Once you get involved in the commercial set-up, that's the way it is," he added.

Puerto Rican nationalists freed

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Carter has decided to grant clemency to three Puerto Rican nationalists who wounded five congressmen in an assault on the House of Representatives and a fourth who was involved in an assassination attempt against President Harry Truman, it was disclosed yesterday.

Rep. Robert Garcia, D-N.Y., said the White House told him of the decision to release the prisoners, who have been in jail since the mid-1950s.

Garcia, a leader ot the movement to gain freedom for the four, said, "I'm just happy that in fact this chapter in Puerto Rican history is over. Those of us who have worked for this are delighted."

Garcia said he was informed of the decision by the White House several hours before the administration planned to make it public.

There has been speculation that the release of the four Puerto Ricans would be tied in with the release of four Americans who have been jailed for more than a decade in Cuba.

However, a Justice Department source said there was no prisoner exchange of any sort involved in the president's decision.

Critics of the continued jailing of the Puerto Ricans said it was a violation of Carter's human rights policy.

One of the nationalists, Oscar Collazo, 64, is serving a life term for his part in the shooting in 1950 at Blair House, the presidential guest quarters across the street from the White House. At the time of the attack, Truman was living there temporarily while the White House was being renovated.

A White House guard and a Puerto Rican attacker were killed in the violence, but the Puerto Ricans did not reach Truman.

The other three who received clemency Thursday have been in jail since 1954. They had sprayed gunfire from a gallery overlooking the chamber of the House of Representatives, wounding five congressmen.

The other three Puerto Ricans receiving clemency are Lolita Lebron, 52, Irving Flores Rodriguez, 52, and Raphael Concel Miranda, 49.

Mrs. Lebron, who is serving a 56-year term, began the attack in the House by unfurling a red and white flag in the gallery and shouting in Spanish, "Free Puerto Rico."

The other two are serving 25-75-year terms. They became eligible for parole in July.

This 1954 Associated Press file photo shows three of the four Puerto Rican nationalists granted clemency by President Carter yesterday. The three are, from left, Irving Flores Rodriguez, Rafael Concel Miranda and Lolita Lebron. The fourth nationalist, Andres Cordero was granted clemency by Carter in 1977. The four were jailed in the mid-1950's after an assault on the House of Representatives in which five congressmen were wounded.

Kennedy's son claims robbery - drugs suspected

By TOM KELLY
Associated Press

NEW YORK—David Kennedy, 24-year-old son of the late Robert F. Kennedy, claims he was robbed during a chance encounter in Harlem. But police sources said yesterday he had gone to a seedy hotel there to buy cocaine.

"The kid is known as 'White James,'" said a narcotics division source, who asked not to be named.

"He was brought up to the area months ago by a black dude and said his name was James. But they got so many Jameses up here they put the tag 'White James' on him, for obvious reasons."

As this source reconstructed events, young Kennedy got into an argument with a pusher over payment for cocaine, but police arrived before any drugs actually changed hands.

The New York Post claimed that Kennedy admitted to police that he was in the shabby Shelton Plaza hotel to buy drugs and quoted him as saying:

"Please, this can't get in the press. I just want to get a plane to Hyannis." Hyannisport, Mass., is the summer home of the Kennedy clan on Cape Cod.

The police narcotics source denied that young Kennedy made any incriminating statement.

"He did say he was a Kennedy," the source added. "He was really shaken up. He was plain scared. His hands were shaking and he was near tears."

Kennedy's story, according to police, was that he was driving his BMW, an expensive German import, on 116th Street near Eighth Avenue about 5:15 pm Wednesday when two men flagged him down.

"I was just riding through when two fellows beckoned me with their hands," police said Kennedy told them. "I just wanted to see what they wanted."

Kennedy was quoted as saying he got out of his car, whereupon he was seized by the pair and forced into the lobby of the hotel at

Director Daniels

New head named for activities office

By DAVID ROUTHIER
Collegian Staff

After one month's delay and controversy over the search procedure for a new Director of Student Activities, DR. O.C. Bobby Daniels has been named acting director of the Studend Activities Office.

Vice—Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson made the appointment upon the recommendation of Student Government Association leaders on Monday August 27.

The search for a full—time director of Student Activities, which administers a total budget of over $3.4 million, was halted in August.

Madson cancelled the search at the request of former Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery when Search Committee Chairman Fred Preston submitted a written dissension from committee's recommendations.

In his report to Madson, Preston wrote: "Stated quite succinctly, after observing the committee process as chairperson, I believe at minimum, the integrity of the process is suspect and the mandate of affirmative action has been seriously compromised."

Student Senate Speaker David Barenberg, said he believe the search was cancelled because of Dean of Students William Field's disapproval of the committee—recommended candidates.

"The real question," Barenberg said, "is how affirmative action policies are used at the University to week out prospective job candidates which the administration does not like."

The SGA leaders are optimistic about the appointment of Daniels as acting director, Barenberg said.

The Student Activities Office, headquarters for Recognized Student Organizations, is "responsible for administration of the Student Activities Trust Fund, and all functions of the student government," Daniels said.

Daniels came to UMass in 1971 as the first training coordinator for the University's Institute for Governmental Services. In 1973 he became director of the University's Office of Community Development and Human Relations.

He was named associate Dean of Students in 1974 and also serves as an adjunct professor of education in the University's School of Education.

"I will be giving top priority to my new position," Daniels said. "The appointment came as a complete shock."

Daniels said he is enthusiastic about the possibilities of his new position.

"I view the whole function of this office as a learning laboratory," he said, "and I intend to treat my role here as a socio—educational experience."

Financial Aid to clear backlog

By JENNY YODER
Collegian Staff

The Financial Aid Department is working full spesd in order to clear its desk of a backlog in aif upplications under consideration, accoring to Financial Aid Director Ed Apodaca. Apodaca blamed the delay on a 300 percent increase in the number of financial aid help loan applications this year and te failure of students to meet the deadline.

On Sept. 19, the Bursar will begin to dispense the first installment to the financial aid applicants in partial sums of $500, which is $200 over the amount issued last year at one time.

"Pem ple were asked to get their help lean applications in by 'June 30th, 1979. Only 1000 people met this date; 6000 did not, which has made things very difficult. I think there is a problem in that the students' expect sncy of the Financial Aid Department is beyond what is realistic." Apodaca said.

Of the 6000, 3000 have been cleared, and 3000 are being processed now, 2000 of which are eligible to be applied against their bill, Apodaca said.

On September 19th, the Bursar will begin to dispense the first installment to the financial aid applicants in partial sums of $500, which is $200 over the amount that was issued last year at one time; Apodaca said. It is possible that next year the full sum will be released at one time, he said.

The full $1000 grants may be dispensed at the start of next ysur regardlessof past problems. In the past problems arose when students withdrew halfway through he year without paying back half of thsic financial aid.

Twenty eight million dolaars of financial aid is being issued to students this year, including bank, and "help" loans, which is $9,379,000 more than was issued last year. Of the total $18,671,000 has already been awarded, and applications will continue to be reviewed for help loans. Apodaca said.

"It has not been the tuition increase or inflation which has been the main c.ause for the increased aid" He said, It is "the introduction of the Middle Income Student Act which made all students eligible for aid, instead of only the financially needy as was the case last year. Thus, there has been a 300 percent increase in the help loan applicants."

Apodaca said his department plans workshops for the students to assist them with their individual financial aid situations. Brochures are also to be published soon, and a proposal for a financial aid advisory committee has recently been submitted to the Chancellor.

Here are some helpful hints from the Financial Aid Department: ——First of all, don't wait until the last minute to submit your financial aid application — apply as soon as you see the forms.

Meet deadlines, read instructions carefully and follow them exactly.

Be responsible in staying in touch with the Financial Aid Office.

Make sure that your form is complete and legible, and lastly, remember that a help loan takes from four to six weeks to process!

Student pols plan powerful year

By DEBORAH COHEN
Collegian Staff

"My major goal this year is to increase student power," Student Senate Co—President Brian Burke said yesterday. "There are a lot of openings on committees that many students don't know about," his partner Student Trustee Rich LaVoice added.

The organization of the Student Senate provides plenty of opportunities for the budding politician on campus, but, as with most political organizations, the bulk of the power is held by the few people at the top.

Co—Presidents Burke and LaVoice both elected by the student population divide the duties of the presidency. Burke works on campus affairs and describes his position as an advocacy—watch—dog role. He is the only student delegate to the Faculty Senate, and acts as a liason between the groups. He also deals with Five Colleges, Inc. in deciding bus routes, transfer policies and other issues.

LaVoice deals primarily with the external affairs of the president's office. He represents the Amherst campus on the Board of Trustee and contributes to policy the board sets. He also serves on the Advisory Council to the State Secretary of Education, presents testimony to the legislature, files bills, and has met with the Governor to discuss issue relating to students here.

Both co—presidents oversee the workings of the Student Government Association and have veto power over any bill acted on in the Senate. They make appointments to various committees and positions, including the new vacant Student Attorney General

The two other major officers are Senate Speaker, Dave Barenberg, and Treasurer Pat Hart. Both positions are elected by the Senate. Barenberg is the executive officer of the Student Senate and oversees the operation of all Senate committees. He also coordinates the workings of those committees with the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy with the teams, which often overlap in function.

Hart, as Treasurer, holds the financial reins of the Senate which this year has a $1.4 million budget. These four men sit on the various committees, have decision and policy making power, and are voting members of the Senate, with the two Co—Presidents sharing one vote.

The Senate itself is made up of 130 senators, elected from each residence hall, the Greek system, commuters and special—constituency groups such as Third W rld and women. Senators and non—senators serve on Senate committees such as Governmental Affairs Academic Affairs and Rents and Fees. These committees make recommendations are then voted on by the Senate as a whole.

The first meeting of the Student Senate is scheduled for Wednesday 7 p.m. September 12 in ccl67 and is open to the public. Elections for senators are set for September 24 to 25. The Student Senate office is located in SU 420.

How did you try to stay dry?

With the onset of tropical storm David yesterday, UMass students were forced to find different ways to best flee the wetness from the sky. "Wheather" it be the trusty umbrella, the Collegian or the local bus stop, people found travel between classes and home a dampening experience.

Sojourn - a woman's haven

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Of the thousands of social service agencies in Massachusetts there are but a few dozen that service only adolescent women. One such agency, Sojourn, a counseling and advocacy center in Northampton, was created in 1975 to aid runaway girls, as well as women seeking jobs, foster homes, alternative schools and informal counseling and support.

While co-educational agencies have these services, Sojourn Director Susan Sherry identified some special needs of adolescent women. "Alot of agencies do not recognize the problems of young women who are self-destructive, suicidal, in a deep depression, or going througha teen-age pregnancy alone. If a boy acts up in a classroom he is noticed, but a depressed girl who withdraws may be overlooked." she said.

The staff of 14 counselors service women aged 13-21 in non-residential programs, such as counseling, survival skills and vocational guidance. The residential program services women 13-18 who need either foster care, a group home arrangement, or the support to live on their own.

"All of the services cater to the individual needs of the women, and there are some issues concerning sexuality, sexual abuse, incest, that are needed by only women," Sherry said.

Funding for the agency is from various state and federal sources that direct moies for specific types of needs. In this way "we can ignore traditional labels given to clients and cater to the diverse needs of the women." Sherry said.

Sojourn shares funding with five other area social agencies and refers women with crisis related problems or needs that could best be handled by another agency.

In addition to the paid staff Sojourn trains volunteers interested in social service and counseling to act as case managers. Interested women are interviewed and once accepted, aid in reviewing cases.

"Case managers are important, because often a girl is afraid, or will not see a counselor but will talk with a case manager," Sherry said.

Sherry said there is a duel committment to the clients and to the case managers to make sure it is a good experience for them both.

Adolescent women who are serviced by Sojourn come from all over the state, and are referred by a wide range of traditional agencies such as schools, courts, the State Department of Mental Health, as well as other agencies and self referrals.

"Often women with serious family problems stay in their own homes and are counseled so they can better cope with the family situation. Run away women who have been abused by boyfriends. have typical adolescent problems, or failing peer relationships will seek out Sojourn for help,"

Sex 'choice' abortions - morality disputed

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Even though women sometimes have abortions if they learn their unborn baby is not the sex they hoped for, doctors should not limit the availability of tests that provide this information, an ethics expert says.

Most doctors agree that abortions for sex choice are morally abhorrent, says John C. Fletcher, but physicians who think women have a right to control their reproduction cannot logically withhold the prenatal exams.

"One must be willing to accept the fact that some abortions will be performed for trivial reasons," Fletcher, a bioethics expert for the National Institutes of Health, wrote in yesterday's New England Journal of Medicine.

The test, called amnioncenteses, is intended primarily to find out whether a fetus will be born with a genetic defect.

But it will also reveal the sex of the child. And sometimes a woman will have an abortion if she learns, for instance, that she is carrying a boy when she wants a girl.

Fletcher said doctors should warn parents that amniocentesis carries a slight but real risk of death to the fetus and injury to the mother. Surveys show that the risk to the unborn child is less than one percent. And seven times out of 10,000, the results of the test are wrong.

Now, Fletcher said, many doctors and medical centers routinely refuse to give these tests simply to determine the sex of the fetus. Only a small fraction of the 15,000 women who had amniocentesis last year used the test for this purpose.

"I personally believe that sex choice is not a compelling reason for an abortion," Fletcher wrote. "The first moral response of most who think about the issue is close to queasiness."

But Fletcher noted that the Supreme Court ruled that the woman has the sole right to decide whether she wants an abortion, and she does not have to tell anyone why.

"It is inconsistent to support an abortion law that protects the absolute right of women to decide and, at the same time, to block access to information about the fetus because one thinks that an abortion may be foolishly sought on the basis of the information."

Fletcher emphasized in an interview that his views are his own and not official government policy.

Campus labor strife:

URI classes halted; faculty strikes for pay raise

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press Writer

The University of Rhode Island suspended all further classes yesterday until settlement of a faculty strike, the first such strike in the school's 87-year history.

URI President Frank Newman said the move was designed to reduce friction on he main Kingston campus among striking and non-striking faculty members and also between faculty and students.

He said the strike's success—less than 10 percent of URI's classes were held yesterday—also prompted his action.

Contract disputes also remain unsettled at the Rhode Island School of Design, Bryant College and Rhode Island Junior College.

URI's suspension of classes was hailed as a victory by the 700 URI teachers, represented by the American Association of University Professors.

"Unfortunately, it is not the action that students and faculty need most—a return to negotiations which the Board of Regents has abandoned," said chief faculty negotiator Pat Devlin.

Newman said the regents were unwilling to resume negotiations without the faculty first ending the strike.

The regents announced Wednesday that an impasse had been reached and asked for state mediation. Earl E. Bushman Jr. was appointed to hear the dispute and he called a meeting for Tuesday morning to hear from both sides.

But Edward Marth, executive secretary of the AAUP, said the appointment of Bushman was "just pouring gas on the fire" and will lengthen the strike.

Bushman has 10 days to settle the dispute before the matter goes to binding arbitration.

If the strike extends beyond the weekend, it will affect 6,500 students at the university's extension division in Providence in addition to 11,000 in Kingston.

The teachers set up picket lines early Wednesday and succeeded in stopping about 75 percent of the opening day classes. Students were confused and demoralized; many went from class to class, waited 10 minutes to see their teacher wasn't coming, and then repeated the process all day long.

Only 45 of 500 classes were held Wednesday morning, according to university estimates, and the heavy rains caused even more uncertainty and depression.

Newman said commuting students should stay home until the strike is settled. Dorm students can continue living on campus or go home, he said, adding that they might be charged extra for living there if the strike dragged on.

Newman emphasized that only classes had been suspended and that all other university functions, such as research and even football games, would continue.

Teachers will not get paid unless they cross the picket lines and sign in, he said.

"I worry most about the freshmen," he said. "When they go off to college there's confusion, loneliness, fear and misunderstanding. . .Now there's even more ambiguity—they're supposed to go to class, but no one's there. They're supposed to cross a picket line, but they don't know what that means or whether they should."

Newman said he spent most of yesterday working on a compromise solution to getting the regents and faculty negotiators back to the bargaining table. He refused to give details of his plan, saying only that the union flatly turned it down.

Devlin said the plan called for the faculty to end the strike, which was unacceptable.

The AAUP is seeking a two-year contract calling for an 8 percent pay raise the first year and a 9.5 percent increase in the second. The regents have offered an average 7 percent jump in each year.

The university's bargaining position was weakened yesterday when members of two other unions refused to cross the faculty picket lines.

BU opens fall with campus-wide strike

BOSTON (AP)—Boston University students were greeted by pickets yesterday as the nation's fifth largest private university began its academic year embroiled in a strike by its clerks, technicians and librarians.

Members of District 65 of the Distributive Workers of America voted 218-50 to strike Wednesday after the two sides reached an impasse over money issues. New talks were scheduled for last night.

But univeristy officials reported that students returned to classes without incident. A threatened boycott of classrooms by faculty members apparently failed to materialize.

"We have reports that 50 pickets are out, mostly around administration buildings," said Steve Wagner, a spokesman for the university. "Other than than, it seems a normal start of the year."

Wagner said only 237 of the 860 workers represented by the union failed to show up for work.

That figure was called "extremely doubtful," by Barabara Rahke, an organizer for District 65.

"I don't have an exact figure, but based on the feedback we've been getting and the phone calls, my impression is that their figure is not right," she said.

Faculty support for the strikers also remained a question.

Wednesday, the faculty union recommended that teachers hold their classes off campus so the school's 25,000 students could avoid picket lines.

But university officials warned that such a boycott would violate the contract between the school and the Boston University chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

The chapter was scheduled to meet with members yesterday and today. Ms. Rahke said she felt the faculty was supporting the strike.

"The ways in which the faculty shows support are numerous," she said. "The faculty doesn't do clerical jobs, so no typing gets done, no phones get answered. The faculty also speaks to the students."

Talks broke down Wednesday after the two sides disagreed on matters ranging from salary to medical insurance and union security.

The workers, who earn an average of $4.90 an hour, want a 45-cent-an-hour increase this year and a 40-cent increase next year. The univeristy offered 35-cent-an-hour increases for the next two years.

The union also wants to make membership mandatory for any new workers. The university has refused union calls for binding arbitration.

Sensitive 'Break Away'

By ROD CARVETH
Collegian Staff

"When you're 16, they it Sweet Sixteen. When you're 18, you caan go into bars and vote. What about when you're 19? What happens then?"

For many 19 year—olds, the answer to this question is easy: you go to college. For Dave, Mike, Cyril and Moocher, characters in the new movie "Breaking Away" the answer is not so clearcut, for they have other questions to answer, such as: what if you have neither the means nor the desire to go to college? or, what if you live in a college town such as Bloomington, Indiana? In foregoing college for various reasons, the four have become "cutters," or townies. As the first full year after high school graduation comes to an end, the harsh reality of making career decisions, and even worse, he possibility of the four members of their little group going their separate ways, looms over their idyllic existence of hanging out together.

Director Peter Yates and screenwriter Steve Teisch's realistic and sensitive handling of the problems of "breaking away" from the teenage years to young adulthood makes "Breaking Away" one of the finest, and most important films, particularly for the colleg—age audience to come around in a long time.

The essence of "Breaking Away" lies in its characterizations. Mike (Dennis Quaid) portrays the former high school quarterback who realizes while watching the Indiana Univeristy football team practice that he will never be their quarterback. Cyril (Daniel Stern), who was so sure that he would get that scholarship to go to college, but was not surprised about his failure to do so, masks his insecurities behind witty cynicism. Moocher (Jackie Earle Haley) does not let his lack of size deter hime from accepting the full—size responsibility of marriage.

The most interesting character, however, is Dave (Daennis Christopher) who has taken up bicycle racing during this year off. Having become enamoured with the Italian Cinzano bike racing team, Dave arms himself with English—Italisn phrasebooks and operatic recordings in order to become Italian himself — a decision that causes no end of grief for his parents (Paul Dooley, Barbara Barrie). Along the way, Dave woos and Indiana U. co—ed (Robyn Duoglass) in his Italian guise, a relationship that blossoms so long as Dave remains Italian.

Dave's bike racing also provides the dramatic vehicle for the film's climax. Dave, Mike, Cyril and Moocher are allowed to enter a team in the Little 500 bike race, competing against the college students that both despise and envy. Yates who directed the famous car chase sequence in "Bullitt" skillfully constructs a thrilling, and very satisfying conclusion to the competition.

Director Yates' decision to film entirely on location in Bloomington (utilizing Matthew Leometti's splendid photography), complete with the various periods of architecture, and the beautiful surrounding countryside, was a stroke of genius. Quaid, Stern and Christopher all shine in their first major film roles, while Haley has shown considerable development in his acting since the "Bad News Bears."

Playing now at Showcase Cinemas in N. Springfield.

The summer after high school graduation proves a memorable one for Mike (Dennis Quaid), Cyril (Daniel Stern), Dave (Dennis Christopher) and Moocher (Jackie Earle Healey) in "Breaking Away." (Photo released by 20th Century-Fox.)

will be taken in order to repair or replace the building's faulty brick siding.

While the Amherst, Hampshire, Smith and Mount Holyoke college libraries will be open to UMass students as usual, it appears certain they would not be able to accomodate all UMass students.

"This (UMass) library seats slightly more than 3000 people at full capacity, I doubt that the other four combined could match that," Wright said.

Wright also cited the other schools obligations to hsic mqn sh udents and that UMass students should use their facillitites discretely.

Ilienn Melanik, a librarian at Smith College, said that she hasn't noticed any more people than usual at the school's library which opened for the school year earlier this week.

Plans have been made for the member of the Univsity University library staff to work at Amherst Colleg's Robert Frost library which opens for the semester today.

Wright suggested that faculty postpone assignments hhuh would require the use of a libraries resources. "Faculty should be as flexable as possible and hopefully make up for it later in the semester," he said.

"I hope everybody will bear with us until the pibrary is repaired."

The library was closed last Friday due to engineering consultants reports that there were hazards of cracking and chipping of the buipfings brick facade.

Adams said the decision was made at a meeting when no representative of the program was present.

The Inquiry Program had been located in Pierpont since 1969 offering first and second year students an alternative to the traditional college curriculum.

According to Adams the program allow students to design a two to six semester schedule that suits their educational needs while earning up to 60 credits for a University degree.

Students in the program take University classes in addition to Inquiry Program classes topics of which range from politics to theater.

Adams said there are no pre—requisites for program admittance other than the student's diesire to design their course of study while fulfilling program requirements.

This year, as in previous years, student applications to the program outnumber its capacity. Approximately 100 undergraduates and 30 students from the University Without Walls Program are part of this year's Inquiry Program Adams said.

Inquiry Program students were once required to live in Pierpont where the program classes were taught. The residency requirement was later changed and some students chose to live in other residential areas.

1600 officers oppose SALT II agreement

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON

WASHINTON — A former Defense Intelligence Agency chief, disagreeing with the Carter administration, said yesterday he knows of "absolutely no evidence" that Soviet combat troops were stationed in Cuba in the mid or early 1970's.

"If they were there we sure missed the, and we covered Cuba very well," retired Army Lt. Gen. Daniel Graham told a committee that is considereing Senate ratification of the SALT II treaty.

Graham made the assertion while joining retired Adm. Thomas H. Moorer and some 1,600 other retired admirals and generals in registering opposition to the new strategic arms limitation treaty SALT II.

Graham and Moorer presented the Foreign Relations Committee with petitions and a letter signed by more than 1,600 retired generals and admirals who oppose ratification of the pact.

The committee's consideration of the SALT II pact, which was resumed this week following a month—long congressional recess, has been clouded by the administration's acknowledgement that Russia has between 2,000 and 3,000 combat troops stationed in Cuba.

Sen. Frank Church, D—Idaho, the panel's chairman, came from a series of high—level briefings Wednesday with a warning that the treaty will not be ratified as long as the troops remain stationed in Cuba.

Church resumed the SALT hearings yesterday after dalaying them for a day to permit time for the committee to hear secret testimony about the Cuban situation.

During his appearance, Graham was questioned about an assertion by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, who said that 2,000 to 3,000 Soviet combat troops have been in Cuba since at least 1975.

Vance also said Wednesday there are indications some Soviet combat elements had been on the Caribbean island since the early 1970's.

Graham responded by asserting, "If that was so, there was absolutely no evidence of that when I was chief of military intelligence."

Graham said the last time Soviet combat troops in brigade strength were in Cuba was in 1962. He said U.S. intelligence judged their mission to be the guarding of military equipment.

"I believe these new troops are part of a pattern," Graham said. "I believe something must be done about de9ling withi what may be the tip of the iceberg.

"We are only seeing that which i7pp to hid," he said. "Ane we better take this extremelyis3ously "

Vr2m siad that during his tenure at the Defense Inteliigecv6.iU.S i7ur-veillance of Cuba included overflights by spy planes. Th flights)re discontinued early in the Carter administration.

Graham also said that the most U.S. intelligence ver found during the years he headed the intelligence agency was the construction of recreational facilities for Soviet sialors.

Moorer voiced opposition to ratification of the SALT II accord, and said he believes the Senate should suspend consideration until the matter of the Soviet troops is settled.

Rape issue involves all

In our sexually oriented society, it is understandable that men and women size each other up—and occasionally build elaborate fantacies about "making it" with the girl or guy down the hall.

But it is unfortunate that women are continually thought of and think of themselves as sexual of objects. And violence against women is increasing—and the attitude that women are helpless, weak and defenseless makes them vulernable to harrassment and rape.

Because of the mis-handling of rape cases in the courts, moreover, it is understandable that women are afraid to prosecute men who rape them.

But it is imperative that the rapist is tried and stopped—from commiting further rapes. Rape does not occur only between a strange man who stalks a woman in a dark path.

Debbie Wallace

Women are often raped by men who are friends—or boyfriends.

This type of rape, which the courts call the third degree, is considered less of a crime—and thus the offender is levied a less severe sentence than the "night stalker."

But whether rape is a sex act—or a violent one—is a moot point: Rape is rape.

And it is not only the individual, but the media, too, that is guilty of promulgating rape.

Television, movies and books continue to exploit women; to promote them as sexual objects. And though there is an increasing awareness of the changing roles of women—and though women are beginning to join the male work force—the media still represents the average woman as a housewife; as dependent on the dominant male; and as unable to make decisions for herself.

And it is noteworthy, moreover, if women continue to think of themselves as weak and defenseless, and do not try to protect themselves, they will not be able to walk safely during the day or night.

The distortion of women continues, even in an age of heightened awareness to the accomplishments of women. And as long as pornographic magazines are displayed on newstands, and sexist television shows are viewed, the distortion of women will continue.

This exploitation of women serves one purpose: It proves how much education people really need in order to deal with the changing roles of women in our society.

Letters

To the Editor:

Jim Moran's article (The Collegian, Sept. 5) on the "boat people" and the case for Americans to fight for human rights was, although well-intentioned, missed the point.

The proper perspective on the plight of Vietnam was brought out in a letter in the New York Times of Aug. 17, written by a person who has been there. Writes Mr. Browne: "although there is plenty of blame to go around. . .the culprit responsible for the ongoing horror show in Southeast Asia is the U.S."

Let's remember that it was the U.S. which totally destroyed the agricultural potential of Vietnam. This has led to tremendous food shortages in that country, and Mr. Browne points out that this very probably led people to flee that country. It doesn't matter what Jane Fonda or Joan Baez says. What matters much more is what happened, and what is happening today.

Here is a problem whose causes are rarely understood. What is the real root of the problems in Vietnam, Nicaragua, Brazil and elsewhere? Why does the U.S. support inhuman dictators and exploiters of people? To understand this, we must first realize that there is such a thing as U.S. imperialism.

This is an extension of U.S. capitalism, which makes huge profits on these exploits. And if we do nothing about fighting U.S. imperialism, we become silent partners in the crimes being committed against peoples of the world. The answer does not lie in joining such societies and organizations linked with this system, as the ones mentioned by Jim Moran.

Our actions must be as forceful as those of the people who are responsible for crimes against humanity. The challenge is a profound one. We must meet it with all the power we have in us. No less will do.

Black-Jewish rift real?

While the Andrew Young affair is seen by certain hostile segments in both the Black and Jewish communities as a categorical rift in its historic alliance, there are many instances in American politics that such a rift is not evident.

Just recently, for example, The American Jewish Congress announced it would join the NAACP and the National Urban League in supporting the comprehensive national health insurance program proposed by Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass) over the program outlined by President Carter.

Senator Kennedy's health insurance plan has won the endorsement of several Afro-American leaders, including Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP and

Ari Freeman Cohen

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr., president of the National Urban League. In a recent syndicated column, Vernon Jordan commented that "while there's plenty to approve in the Administration plan, it just doesn't go far enough to warrant support."

Also, he said Senator Kennedy's plan "suggests the kind of health system the nation should have." In a similar vein, Dr. Seymour Z. Mann, chairman of the American Jewish Congress Commission on Urban Affairs, said that while the Administration plan contained "some positive points, we believe that on balance Senator Kennedy's proposal would deal most effectively with our nation's most pressing health needs."

The politics of health care has certainly produced widespread concern in recent years by many segments on our society. The cost and maintenance of providing good health care has sky-rocketed beyond the reach of many of our poor people and minorities. They simply don't have the finances to cover the hidden and unexcepted health cost increases.

Under the Kennedy plan, a single-class health care system would over the entire American population, regardless of income or age, and would include full coverage of in-patient hospital services, physicians' fees and laboratory tests. Cost controls would be imposed on hospitals and physicians fees.

Most insurance would be covered by private concerns, with employers paying a premium of up to 35 percent of total wages. Dr. Mann declared: "We favor the Kennedy proposals because it is in keeping with our view of health care as a fundamental right of which the entire population is entitled."

Benjamin Hooks was also reported to have said that the Kennedy health care bill "is structured to provide a comprehensive approach to the problems of the elderly, the young, the poor, and the middle-income of our nation." He urged all Americans to express their support for the bill.

This historical alliance between the Afro-American and Jewish communities over supporting the Kennedy health plan is a good example of how ethnic politics can work for the benefit of all Americans.

Inaccesible library 'not justifiable'

To the editor:

It is not right that we should return to a university where the library is inaccessible. It is not fair that we have to inconvenience ourselves and our studies because we attend a public university rather than Amherst or Smith or Mr. Holyoke or Harvard! It is not right that our university is not properly funded in order to provide each student with a Liberal Arts education comparable to any private college. It is not fair that the quality of education at the University of Massachusetts is rapidly declining. Mostly, it is not justifiable that people who cannot afford private education receive an inferior education.

The current state of the University of Massachusetts is frightening! Think about it.

King can done

There once was a vast, beautiful land that stretched between two great oceans and in it's soil lied the promise of greatness and fulfillment for all it's inhabitants. It was born as a land of hope where all would be free and life would be filled with happiness. It was a land conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. There was joy and optimism throughout the land, until some of the people began to ask just who the "men" were that were created equal.

The men were not black, they were told, and they were not red. In fact, they were nothing but white. The women were not men, of course. Even the poor people were not men, yet they believed it when they were told they were.

The land prospered. Years went by and it became the greatest land in the world, and the people were proud and happy to be a part of it. But some people didn't feel that they were getting their fair share of all the prosperity. The women demanded a greater share, and the blacks and people of other races did, too. The poor people also demanded more, but they didn't really know where or how to find it.

Then some people in a hilly coastal region in the Northeast came up with an idea. For years they had chosen people to lead them to happiness, but all of these people had failed. So they decided they would choose a King, and he would find the answer for them and lead them to a greater share in all that was good in the land. They had already been led by a Duke, but they didn't like his methods of dealing with the ever-increasing "problems" throughout their province. A Duke just wasn't good enough, they said, "We need a King!"

But as the people soon learned, the King didn't know how to solve the problems. He thought he knew, and the people did too, but in fact he knew even less than the people before him. The Lords he chose to help him find the answer didn't even know there was a question! Also, the King hadn't listened when the people had questioned who the "men" were that were created equal. He even went so far as to say that not only were blacks and women and poor people not men, but anyone under twenty-one years of age was not a man, either.

As time went by under his reign, the people began to see that the King was not, as they had hoped, going to find the way to prosperity for them. In fact, many people remembered back before the King came and realized that they had been better off then! This caused great grief among the thinkers of the region, for they knew that the King would be around for four long years, until the entire populace awoke and came to that realization.

The people from the hilly coastal region in the Northeast had made a big mistake. Alas, the King had caused more problems than he was brought in to solve.

Coke shortage threatens US steel industry

By JOHN BRONSON
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Just when the United States is fighting to reduce its dependence on foreign oil, along comes another shortage in a key material — coke.

No, not the kind you drink; the kind that is needed to make the steel that America must have to produce everything from battleships to bobby pins.

Last year, 5.3 million tons of the coal derivative were imported, a sharp jump from the l.8 million tons imported in l977. Experts in the coal and steel industry expect this year's figures to match l978's.

"It is now apparent that for the foreseeable future, American steelmakers will have to import large quantities of coke to keep their mills running at current and anticipated levels," says William Roesch, U.S. Steel Corp. vice president for steel and raw materials.

Moreover, supplies of foreign coke may be getting tighter, forcing steelmakers into the same situation as iol refiners — paying increased prices for imports. And these increases could trickle down to consumers in the form of higher prices for cars, refrigerators and the hundreds of other products made with steel.

However, U.S. dependence on foreign coke is nowhere near what it is on oil. And unlike with oil, the United States sits atop the world's largest supply of coal, so the problem is not a lack of raw material.

But coke is made by baking bituminous coal in temperaturesas high as 2,000 degrees. The process is a dirty one, and that could be a big part of the problem.

Steelmakers say overzealous enforcemtn of the nation's clean air and occupaion safety laws are largely to blame for the predicament.

Faced with the steep costs of retrofitting old coke batteries with pollution equipment, some steel companies have chosen simply to scale back operations and get their coke elsewhere.

According to American Iron and Steel Institute President Robert Peabody, the steel industr's ability to make coke slipped from 58.4 million tons in l974 to 50 million tons last year.

Withe that decrease went l4,500 jobs in the steel and

"We've got tree limbs down all over the place," said Metropolitan District Police spokesman Ken Goldstein. Goldstein reported flooding on l5 of the MDC's roads and said an underpass on Storrow Drive was temporarily closed because of it.

The MBTA attributed its problems to fallen tree limbs.

The National Weather Service in Boston said the storm's center skidded by Massachusetts on the west side, moving northeastward through eastern New York State and Vermont. Partly sunny and warm weather was forecast for t.day.

Winds gusted as high as 78 mph atop Blue Hill in Milton but gust averaged between 40 and 60 mph throughout the rest of the state.

Power outages affected some 50,000 Massachusetts customers, but much of the service was restored by late afternoon. Boston Edison officials said high winds and fallen trees knocked out power to sections of Framingham, Medway, Westwood, Canton and Walpole.

Underground flooding interrupted power to Brookline and the West Roxbury, Dorchester and Roslindale secions of Boston.

A skidding truck overturned inside the Dewey Square tunnel in Boston, blocking traffic for more than an hour on the usually crowded Central Artery, the only north—south expressway through Boston.

State and local police reported several other tractor—trailer accidents during the storm, but no serious problems resulted.

If open for holiday, school to lose funds

WEST BROOKFIELD [AP] — At least one school committeeman in this two—town district wants to go through with a plan to hold school on Martin Luther King Day next January despite a threat by the state to cut state id.

"Let's see if they really carry out their threat," Committeeman Thomas Seifferman says. "I don't like threats. We're constantly being told to follow their orders or they'll withhold money."

Superintendent Paul Daley last month endorsed a school committee mover to keep four schools in Union 12 District open on the holiday because, members said, students would only be "hanging around on the streets."

He said a special program could be held to honor King — a plan he said would be more meaningful to students than a day off.

But he committee was informed by John T. Schomer, assistant director of the state Department of Education, that the attorney general has ruled Jan. 15 a legal holiday, and public offices, including schools, must be closed.

Schomer said at least one day's state aid could be withheld if schools are kept open. He pointed out that holding school that day might also expose the school committee to legal suits.

Union 12 School District includes Warren — population 3,500 — and West Brookfield — population 2,400. Warren and West Brookfield are located in south—central Massachusetts between Palmer and Worcester.

Police estimated that blacks account for only a fraction of one percent of the population.

They said there is a little awareness among students of racial cultural differences.

Russians in Cuba? residents say yes, govt. implies no

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY
Associated Press

HAVANA, Cuba — The Russians in Cuba, whoever they are and whatever their mission, are keeping a low profile during the current summit meeting here of non—aligned leaders — many of whom frown on big—power alliances.

But they are definitely here, according to longtime residents and observers who say after the native Spanish, Russian is the most common language heard on the streets of Havana.

The Cubban government has ridiculed U.S. assertions that 2,000 to 3,000 Soviet combat troops are stationed on this Communist—governed Carribean island, but they have not flatly denied it.

When asked about Soviet troop presence, Cuban officials shrug, smile or inquire why one would want to know.

"You Americans see Russians everywhere, don't you," one Cuban Foreign Ministry official said.

It is not known where the Soviet troops are thought to be in Cuba, though presumably they would be stationed well away from thE capital. U.S. officials say that besides the combat brigade, there are estimated to be 1,500 to 2,000 Soviet military advisers and technical military personnel in Cuba.

As in other foreign posts, the Russians generally keep to themselves, using separate facilities and seldom making unapproved, casual contact with the local people. But during the summit they are particularly unnoticeable.

coal mining industries. In addition, Peabody says the loss of coke—making capacity is equivalent to 46 million barrels of oil per year.

The EPA is skeptical of the industry's claims that environmental rules are the reason for the decline in coke capacity.

Coke ovens need to be rehabilitated periodically, but uncertainty over business conditions delayed inverstment decisions to the point that coke capactity has declined, said Bernard Bloom, ahd engineer in EPA's enforcement office.

"They're just looking for someone else to blame it on... My best estimate is that there may have been a l.5 million ton decrement as a result of environmental laws," he said.

That steelmakers are turning to foreign coke supplies at a time when they are also pressing for more protection from steel imports may strike some as contradictory.

"Sure it's ironic. But the simple fact is that anytime the domestic industry is operating at 85 percent or better of its capacity, it is consuming more coke than it can roduce. You have to get it somewhere," said one c ompany analyst who aked to remain anonymous.

The steel institute says that the industry has been operating at more than 85 percent of canaciiy so far this year.

With steel orders slackening for the fourth quarter, the demand for coke will likely fall more into balance with domestic supply, but the underlying problems will remain.

Central to them, steel company officials say, is the companies' inability to raise the cash necessary to clean up existing coke batteries or install new equipment.

During l974—78, the steel industry spent $13.7 billion on capital improvements despite an internal cash flow of only $12.5 billion, the difference being made up through borrowing, Peabody said.

The cash flow problem comes because profits in the industry have not kept pace with those of other manufacturers.

"The steel industry is over—regulated and is the traditioNal whipping boy of government for inflation," said Gordon Price of Dravo Dorp., a leading designer of coke batteries. "Because the industry's profits are held down, they cannot generate the cash needed to replace facilities," he said.

A typical l million—ton battery equipped with pollution controls would cost between $165 million and $200 million, an increase of about 50 percent over the last five years, he said.

Steelmakers are building and planning new coke facilities, but experts agree the new equipment probably won't add to overall capacity. "These are all holding actions," said Dravo's Price.

According to the steel institute, l7 batteries representing about 5 million tons of coke—making capability will be phased out in the next several years.

Only 3.5 million tons will be recouped by replacement.

Coke was available from overseas sources in l978, because world steel production was down, leaving some foreign mills with coke stockpiles.

But in the face of decreasing coke capacity abroad and a projected upturn in the world steel cycle in the l980's, the United States could find itself in a precarious supply situation.

coal mining industries. In addition, Peabody says the loss of coke—making capacity is equivalent to 46 million barrels of oil per year.

The EPA is skeptical of the industry's claims that environmental rules are the reason for the decline in coke capacity.

Coke ovens need to be rehabilitated periodically, but uncertainty over business conditions delayed inverstment decisions to the point that coke capactity has declined, said Bernard Bloom, and engineer in EPA's enforcement office.

"They're just looking for someone else to blame it on... My best estimate is that there may have been a l.5 million ton decrement as a result of environmental laws," he said.

That steelmakers are turning to foreign coke supplies at a time when they are also pressing for more protection from steel imports may strike some as contradictory.

"Sure it's ironic. But the simple fact is that anytime the domestic industry is operating at 85 percent or better of its capactity, it is consuming more coke than it can produce. You have to get it somewhere," said one company analyst who aked to remain anonymous.

The steel institute says that the industry has been operating at more than 85 percent of capacity so far this year.

With steel orders slackening for the fourth quarter, the demand for coke will likely fall more into balance with domestic supply, but the underlying problems will remain.

Central to them, steel company officials say, is the companies' inability to raise the cash necessary to clean up existing coke batteries or install new equipment.

During 1974—78, the steel industry spent $13.7 billion on capital improvements despite an internal cash flow of only $12.5 billion, the difference being made up through borrowing, Peabody said.

The cash flow problem comes because profits in the industry have not kept pace with those of other manufacturers.

"The steel industry is over—regulated and is the traditioNal whipping boy of government for inflation," said Gordon Price of Dravo Dorp., a leading designer of coke batteries. "Because the industry's profits are held down, they cannot generate the cash needed to replace facilities," he said.

A typical l million—ton battery equipped with pollution controls would cost between $165 million and $200 million, an increase of about 50 percent over the last five years, he said.

Steelmakers are building and planning new coke facilities, but experts agree the new equipment probably won't add to overall capacity. "These are all holding actions," said Dravo's Price.

According to the steel institute, l7 batteries representing about 5 million tons of coke—making capability will be phased out in the next several years.

Only 3.5 million tons will be recouped by replacement.

Coke was available from overseas sources in 1978, because world steel production was down, leaving some foreign mills with coke stockpiles.

But in the face of decreasing coke capacity abroad and a projected upturn in the world steel cycle in the 1980's, the United States could find itself in a precarious supply situation.

Mass. half-tank rule fated

BOATON (AP) - Massachusetts' half-tank gasoline rule, which was announced last June by Gov. Edward J. King, will not be extended beyond its Sept. 30 espiration date, according to state Energy Director Joseph S. Fitzpatrick.

"It will die a slow and peaceful death," Fitzpatrick said.

Under the rule announced during the fury of the gasoline shortage, motorists were required to have onlly half of a tank of gas or less before being able to buy gasoline.

The rule was designed to prevent "topping off" of gas tanis tanks.

Grasso ends rationing

HARTFORD (AP) - Gov. Ella Grasso has ended Connecticut's odd-even gasoline rationing system, effective one minute after midnight last night.

Gov. Grasso praised state residents and gasoline dealers, saying that the end of the odd-even system that began June 20 was made possible by a significant reduction of gasoline consumptions and increased use of mass transportation and other conservation measures.

But hse said other parts of her gas sales plan, including mimimum purcch minimum purchase requirements to prevent topping off and requirements that gas stations post hours of operation, would stayin effect.

RI joins the gas-happy

PROVIDENCE, R.I (AP) - Saying that gasoline supplies are steadily improving, Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy has rescinded the odd-even gasoline rationing plan as of 12zz 12:01 a.m. today.

Garrahy said yesterday he was coordinating the end of the purchase system in coordination with the states of Connecticut and New York. The plan went into effect in Rholde Isaland on July 5.

Juan Mari Bras, head of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, in March said President Carter would face "the biggest political demonstration in his career" if he did not free four Puerto Ricans held in US jails. (AP Lasarphoto)

Rhetoric Program Squelched

CAROLYN KEARNEY
Collegian Staff

All second level rhetoric courses were eliminated this fall due to lack of funding, the acting director of the program said yesterday.

Fern Johnson said that although her department's budget was increased slightly, inflation has actually decreased the budget, forcing courses to be cut.

Since University requiremtns call for the completion of six credits in rhetoric, everyone expect exempted students must take two courses in the department, Johnson said. The department is trying to help freshmen to register for the courses because most of he courses are designed for first year students.

She said upperclassmen will jhve to wait until sprinv semester to register foc second level classes, which are numbered 110 and up.

Seniors graduating in December who have not met rhetoric requirements will probably be given an exemption exam said Annette Rottenberg, who coordinates the exemptions. She said if the seniors fail, an alternate solution will be devised.

"The goal is to try and take care of everyone,"

300 W. 116th St., where he was robbed of $30.

Police were summoned by someone who telephoned a report of a robbery in progress. They arrested Sam Askins, 25, who was standing near the front door of the Shelton Plaza.

But no charge was placed against him; Kennedy reportedly said he could not identify him as one of the three men he said robbed him.

Police said that since no cocaine actually changed hands, no charge was placed against young Kennedy. Twelve years old when his father was assassinated in 1968, he has been living in New York during a year off from studies at Boston College.

"With the wheels, he was easy to spot," said the narcotics division source, in reference to Kennedy's car. "He ran into trouble last night because his usual tout wasn't out front, but somebody knew he had bread and figured he was a mark. . .

"A lot of white kids come to the area because it appears that the cocaine, while still considered garbage, is better than the heroin.

"There are several touts and sellers dealing with just white kids but they are more cautious than the regular pushers. They know these kids have bread, and if one of them has a bad trip the heat will be on. So they don't mess around. . .

"Now the heat's going to be on. The touts and sellers will find another place, and the cycle will begin all over. Whoever ripped the kid off is as good as dead because they brought all this heat."

Winds and rains cause delay at Pleasant Valley

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Heavy rain and whipping winds — a spinoff of Hurrican David born thousands of miles away — hit this central Massachusetts area yesterday, postponing the opening round of the $250,000 Pleasant Valley Golf Classic.

PGA tournament officials sent nine groups off the tee as scheduled before surrendering to a forecast of stormy weather and calling off play.

The weather man proved right. A couple of hours later, the course, particularly the sprawling greens, was inundated and a few limbs were snapped from large trees around the 7,113—yard layout.

The opening round of the 72—hole tournament was postponed until Friday, with the second round rescheduled for Saturday. The 60 low scorers and ties will move into a 36—hole windup Sunday.

"I made my first putt in three weeks and they call it off," said Australian Jack Newton, who had a birdie on his first hole.

"It was all for naught," said Ben Crenshaw, who opened with a bogey and was on his second hole when play was called. "We actually only got sprinkled a little bit, but I can understand why they called it off. They were predicting bad stuff."

PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman took advantage of the rainout to hold meetings with groups of players and explain a proposal that the $13 million tour be split in two.

Under the proposal, the top 100 money winners, plus the usual standard exemptions for such winners as the PGA and the U.S. Open champions, would be eligible to play on the championship tour — 34 events from January through August.

The other 100 or so touring pros would play, probably without having to qualify, in 30 tournaments with lower prize money — $100,000 to $150,000 — from March through October.

"Under the proposal 15 or 30 players at the bottom of the championship tour would be dropped to the second tour, being replaced by an equal number from the second tour," Beman said later.

Beman said the proposal under study would not affect the top money winners, noting that the top 100 have won 86 percent of the prize money the last two years.

"I cautioned the players not to make any decision now becuase we don't have enough information," said Beman. "We need to put together a proper test. A recommendation will be made to the tournament Policy Board, which will make a further study, in October.

Sailing race cancelled

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — High winds from tropical storm David forced the Ida Lewis Yacht Club to cancel the second race yesterday in the One Ton Cup World Sailing Championships.

The race committee had planned to send the 12 yachts on a 25—mile course inside the comparatively sheltered waters of Narragansett Bay rather than the open waters of Rhode Island Sound. But about noon, the committee decided to call the race off.

"We felt the yachts should be able to handle what they were getting, but we'd had a telephone report of 60— to 70—knots in Greenwich, Conn. and the winds were forecast to increase to 40 to 45 knots here," said jury member Ron Ward of Annapolis, Md.

Only a few minutes later, the wind increased to 40 knots accompanied by heavy rain and visibility was reduced to a few hundred yards.

The crews had already drastically reduced sail and some sailed the five miles from the starting line back to their berths in Newport under storm jibs alone.

All made it without mishap except for the yacht Celebration owned by Bruce Clark of Norwalk, Conn., which ran aground briefly while trying to negotiate the channel into a Portsmouth marina.

Event chairman Lucius Collins of Pawcatuck, Conn. said Thursday's race would not be rescheduled.

He said the 12 yachts, representing England, South Africa, the United States and West Germany, will begin a medium—distance race off Newport on Friday.

A day race will be held off Newport on Monday and a long distance race of about 300 miles will start next Tuesday.

The American yacht Pendragon, owned by John MacLaurin of Santa Barbara, Calif., was the series leader with 12½ points followed by Celebration with 11 points, Firewater, owned by Robert Barton of Rowayton, Conn., with 10 points and the British yacht Indulgence skippered by Graham Walker with nine points.

Compensation for M.L. Carr

McAdoo sent to Detroit

By PHIL CANNADAY
Associated Press

BOSTON— Sharpshooter Bob McAdo o, unhappy with the Boston Celtics, was traded to Detroit yesterday, solving a dispute between the two National Basketball Association clubs over compensation for Boston's signing of forward M. L. Carr.

"I'm delighted to go to a team that wants me," said the 6—fott—9 McAdoo, three—time NBA scoring leader. He had said the New Jersey Nets was his first choice.

"I like Bob McAdoo as a player. I'm sure he'll be playing very hard aginst Boston next year," said Celtics Head Coach Bill Fitch at a news conference in Boston Garden, home court of the Celtics.

However Fitch emphasixed the rest of the deal with the Pistons—a pair of 1980 first—round draft picks from Detroit — "is a positive aspect for the franchise."

Therokkie head coach added: "If you look back at Olympic years, those are your best drafts."

Fitch also said the move "put our payroll back in order," but stressed that was not the sole reason for trading McAdoo.

Late in July, the Celtics signed the 6—foot—6 Carr as a free agent. The lengthy negotiations over compensation between the two clubs resulted in the teams asking NBA Commisioner Larry O'Brien to arbitrate.

O'Brien asked both clubs to submit proposals by Aug. 31, and then set Sept. 7 as the deadline for counter—proposals. However Celtics President Red Auerbach and General Manager Oscar Feldman of Detroit agreed earlier this week on the settlement, Fitch said.

"We have agreed to give them our regular first—round pick and the pick we got from Washington for Kevin Porter," said Pistons spokesman Bill Kreifeldt. "We did it because we expect to carry four, maybe five rookies this year."

Meanwhile Wednesday, the New York Knicks announced the signing of their three top draft choices — center Bill Cartwright and forwards Larry Demic and Sylvester "Sly" Williams — all three choices obtained from Boston last year in the deal that brought McAdoo to the Celtics.

The Iowy Celtics, who finished last season with a 29—53 record, second worst in the NBA, open training camp Sept. 14, and Fitch will work a squad including Carr, Indiana State sensation Larry Bird, and veteran Dave Cowens.

"We want to put together some stability," Fitch said. "I like the feeling we can end up a camp with the same people we started with."

McAdoo, who played only 20 games for Boston last year and averaged 20.6 points a game, still finished fourth among individual scorers in the league with a 24.6 average.

"It'll be a pleasure to play alongside a bona fide center like Bob Lanier for the first time in my career," McAdoo said. "I know Detroit has a great facility to play in and it's been my experience that Detroit has some of the most avid fans the NBA."

College grid preview

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) - What ever happened to he old college football philosophy of opening the season against a patsy'? Perhaps the NCAA's 30-95 scholarship limit really has spread the talent around more evenly but the days of mighty powers opening with a Podunk Normal see m to be a thing of he past.

Twelve members of the Associated Press Top Twenty are in action this weekend and only two ff them, Michigan and Michigan State, appear to have true have-nots for opponents - Northwestern and Illinois, respectively.

It's ont so much that tough openers present a problem for coaches who feel sare only when they're ahead 34-0 with 10 seconds left - Darrell Royal once said that "33 points can go like zap" - but it presents an even greater problem to those poor souls who have to predict the results each week.

These first picks of the season come to you with the annual reminder not to hick the family jewels. The only sure thign is that there is no such thing as a sure thing.

Southern California at Texas Tech: "Texas Tech will be one of the surprise teams in college football this season," says USC's John Robinson. If the Trojans are as good as most people think, it should be... Southern Cal 28-10

Alabama at Georgia Tech: These two haven't met since 1964 and there's been alot of bitterness in the interim. Tech used to be in the Southeastern Conference, which has become the Big One and the Little Nine. The Big One, of course, is ... Alabama 24-14

Sophmore head coach Bob Pickett will get a chance to look at the 1979 edition of the UMass football team when the Minutemen take the field against Columbia University Saturday at Alumni Stadium in a 1:30 pre-season contest.

UMass will be led by senior quarterback Mike McEvilly who will be entering his second season as Pickett's signal caller. The Clinton, Mass. native led the Minutemen to the Yankee Conference championship last year in addition to spearheading the Minutemen drive to the national finals of Division 1-AA.

Bolstering the UMass offense will be running backs Cliff Pedrow, Asa Hilliard, and newcomer Gary Pearson.

After Saturday's test, the Minutemen will travel to Philadelphia next Friday for the Saturday opener against Division I foe Villanova. From there, UMass will return home to host Maine in the regular season opener.

Earlier during the summer, Pickett expressed confidence that UMass would again be a threat to repeat as Yankee Conference champions.

"I'm not going to say that I expect anything different," said Pickett.

UMass students are reminded that their ID's are all that is required to get into a home game.

Out on a limb

This is what you call cheating a little.

This kid took such a beating on his baseball predictions (I picked the Yanks, Kansas City, Philly and San Fransisco) that he decided to wait until after the first week of the season to make his grid picks.

Actually, the season's first Sunday did not help me out very much. It only proved what everyone knew already—that 1979 would be one of the most exciting seasons ever in the NFL. Going into the season, there were only a handful of teams that did not have a realistic shot at the playoffs.

Well, enough with the preliminaries, here goes nothing.

AFC EAST: On Monday night, Steve Grogan looked like a man about ready to lose his job, and the Pats lost one they needed to win. However, the Patriots have far too much talent and much too much depth to finish anywhere but in first place.

When I look at the Dolphins, I see a team that could dominate the 80's. In 1979, Miami is still a player or two away from overtaking the Patriots. The secondary is a big question mark and if the starters get hurt the Dolphins could be up a creek.

AFC CENTRAL: Bahring some real catastrophe, like losing Bradshaw for the season, the Steelers should keep right on trucking to their fourth super bowl title. The champions were all kind of banged up on Monday night and they still beat an excellent football team. I don't want to see these guys when they're healthy. The Bengals, Oilers and Browns are all tough customers and one of them should get a wild card, but they will be too busy beating up on each other to give the Steelers any trouble.

AFC WEST: This should be the closest divisional race in the league, as four fine teams will battle for the crown. Denver still has the best defense in the conference, Oakland is still a team to be worried about, and Seattle has a potent offense and an improving defense.

The team to watch in the west however, is San Diego. That offense is going to score a lot of points, and that defense, despite the loss of Louis Kelcher, is not going to give up too many.

NFC WEST: The Cowboys have lost "Too Tall" and Charlie Waters and last week Otis Anderson ran all over the Doomsday boys for almost 200 yards. Still, Dallas has enough depth to overcome any injury and they should scrape out enough wins to wind up in the Rose Bowl next January. The only team that could give the Cowboys any trouble is Philadelphia, a team that looks better the more you look at them. The Eagles have a smart young coach in Dick Vermeil, an ever-improving quarterback in Ron Jaworski, a giraffe named Harold Carmichael for a receiver and a runaway freight train named Wilbert Montgomery at running back. On top of all this the Eagles have a defense that may be the nastiest in the league. It looks like rebuilding time for the Giants, Cards and and Redskins.

NRC CENTRAL: All five teams have a shot at the title in the NFC central, a once proud division now mired in mediocrity. The Vikings could win it, but they don't seem to have the horses on defense anymore. The Lions could win it, but the loss of Gary Danielson means they probably won't. The Bears could win it, but Walter Payton appears to be all the offense they have. The Packers could win it and just might win it, if they can get their offense out of neutral. The Buccaneers, yes, that's right the Buccaneers could win and should win it. The defense, led by the Selmon brothers is a fearless group, and Doug Williams is bringing the offense up to respectability. The Bucs may only win eight games, but that's all they should need.

NFC WEST: The Rams are the Red Sox of the NFL, always good, but never good enough. The Rams last season in LA should be little different from the last six. They will win the divisional title, as usual, and then they will lose in the playoffs, as usual.

The battle in this division should be for second place, and New Orleans and Atlanta will be doing the battling. The Saints should come out on top (taking second place and a wild card berth) because of Archie Manning. This will be the year he proves to everyone that he is the best QB in the NFC. The Falcons will hang close, but they used up all their miracles last year.

In the AFC: The next time the Steelers and Patriots meet, it could be for the championship.

In the NFC: I'm looking forward to a Dallas-Philly finale, and that one should be a realwar.

Need the library? Wait ten days

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Work toward the transfer of 250,000 volumes from the main library to the former Goodell library begins today, but student access is not expected for about ten days, university officials said.

"Goodell will have to be cleaned up and more electrical systems will have to be installed before service is restored," Anne Wood of the University news bureau said Friday.

Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen last night said the Goodell building should be open in ten days.

"The library staff is just working some sort of minor miracles," Arthur S. Clifford, news bureau spokesman said last night.

The library staff first met as a whole Friday morning to discuss strategy for the move to Goodell.

Paula Mark, reference librarian, Friday said the staff responded quickly to the urgency of the situation and adapted rather quickly.

"I think it's realistic to say this is an emergency situation," she said.

People were urged to speak up about their apprehension of using the tunnel for access, Mark said, but none did.

About the expected length of stay in the Goodell building, "the way they were talking we should expect to be there for at least a year," she said.

"She's preparing for the worst possibility," Clifford said of Mark's statement. He said he could not predict how long library facilities would be in the Goodell building.

THE SOLUTION:

Maybe bales of hay?

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Two bales of hay are expected to be tested today to learn if they are fire retardant for possible use at the base of the library, Donald Robinson, director of the department of Environmental Health and Safety said Friday.

According to Anne Wood of the University News bureau, if the hay is found to be fireproof the physical plant workers will begin installing hay bales early this week.

David Spencer, an architect in the Physical Plant, said, "As a precaution, one strategy that we are looking at is to lay down some baled hay which would act as a shock absorber."

Robinson said the bales will be two and one half to three feet high and will measure 36 by 64 feet in diameter. The bales will be placed on the West side of the library. Spencer said, because "to get access from underground to the University library to Goodell, there is about a 60 foot stretch where if some bricks fall down, it might offer a dynamic load."

Friday, Robinson said, "Test bales have been treated. They will cure over the weekend and test them on Monday."

Robinson also said Environmental Health and Safety is looking into the possibility of enclosing the hay bales with a tenting

Check cashing resumes at the Bursar's Office

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Today and through the rest of this week students may again cash personal checks at the Bursar's Office in Whitmore Administration Building.

The decision, announced Friday, by Bursar Robert Mishol, was made because of the delayed opening of a check-cashing window in the Campus Center due to construction problems.

The window, located across from the Campus Center Auditorium on the ground floor, was scheduled to open the first day of classes but problems with the alarm system and the installation of bullet—proof glass have delayed the opening. According to Mishol, the construction whould soon be completed and the window opened "any day now."

The transfer of the check cashing service from the Bursar's Office to the Campus Center was made to facilitate services at the Bursar's office, Mishol said. A new billing and receipt system was instituted for this semester and Mishol said beginning next week he will keep five windows open to handle financial aid awards. He said he wants the lines to move quickly to help serve students more efficiently.

Check cashing was handled exclusively by the Bursar's Office last year after a window in the Student Union was closed two years ago due to health and security reasons. A plan to provide check-cashing services in the Campus Center at that time was rejected by the Campus Center Board of Governors.

Students may also cash checks in the University Store in the Campus Center, providing they purchase 10 percent of the check under $20, 20 percent up to $50, and 50 percent over $50.

THE COMMISION:

Will it investigate?

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

Although the library would appear a perfect target for a special commission investigating state and county buildings, there is no way to know if the matter is under scrutiny due to the grand jury secrecy privileges granted the commission.

The Ward Commission, named after its Chairman John Williams Ward, Amherst College president, was established by the Massachusetts legislature in 1978 in response to corruption in the building of UMass Boston, the so-called MBM scandal.

According to the commisssion's interim report to the House of Representatives dated January 15, 1979, the commission has two mandates: First, to investigate corruption and maladministration in the construction of state and county buildings; and second, to recommend legislative reforms to improve the management and administration of public construction work.

The seven-member commisssion, composed of an architect, and engineer, two attornies, a public management specialist, the attorney general and Ward, has broad powers: to issue summonses, to hold private and public hearings, to apply to the courts for immunity for witnesses, and to refer evidence to the attorney general or other law enforcement agencies for presentation to a grand jury.

The 12-page interim report alludes to corrupt practices in the state and county construction process, but states that the

Miss America "grateful"

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) -- The new Miss America, Cheryl Prewitt of Mississippi, says she will offer 10 percent of her earnings to God for her two "miracles" - walking again after a crippling childhood accident and winning the Miss America pageant.

The accident left her in a body cast and wheelchair for eight months. Although doctors said she would never walk again, Miss Prewitt said her prayers allowed her to walk.

Miss Prewitt, 22, of Ackerman, Miss., defeated 49 other contestants. Saturday night to become Miss America 1980, a title that guarantees her a $20,000 scholarship and more than $50,000 in personal appearance bookings during her reign.

Farming rivalry subsides

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) -- Two men arrested by Vermont State Police at the State Fair in Rutland for allegedly operating illegal gambling devices, have been released on bail.

Police say both men will be chargerd formally with possession of a gambling device today. Police raided a trailer on the fair grounds this weekend and seized about 20 machines. Police say the value of the confiscated merchandise is between $70,000 and $100,000.

The games, known as "super discs," were classified as gambling devices by police because they are mechanical and the patron has no chance to control the outcome.

Men charged for gambling

WOODSTOCK, Vt. (AP) -- A rivalry that once existed between environmentalists and farmers in Vermont has all but disappeared now that both groups have taken up the cause of saving the family farm.

A prime example of the change in attitude was the focus of a special meeting of the Vermont Natural Resources Council in Woodstock this weekend. The main speaker before the state's largest environmental organization was Vermont Agriculture Secretary William Darrow, who urged the group not to allow Vermont farms to become developments.

Rivals Brown, Miss Lillian campaign in New Hampshire

NASHUA, N.H. (AP) -- California governor Edmund G. Brown Jr., an undeclared presidential candidate, yesterday came to New Hampshire, the state with the nation's earliest presidential primary, to promote his campaign.

Greeted by supporters with placards, Brown exhorted Democrats to choose leaders concerned with "putting people ahead of profit, and peace ahead of cold war."

Brown spoke at the Hillsboro County Democratic picnic, sharing the platform with Miss Lillian, who was campaigning for her son Jimmy Carter.

About 40 supporters carrying signs that said "Brown in 1980," greeted Brown with chants of "Jerry for President."

One of the supporters, Penny Brakus, carrying a sign declaring "New Hampshire Loves Brown," confided that the sign carriers actually were bused in from Massachusetts.

The woman said she was from Amherst, Mass. "They asked us if we wanted to go to a picnic. We said, 'Yes'".

At the picnic, amid published reports that Carter may be under pressure to bow out of a race for a second term from Democrats who fear a Republican victory, Miss Lillian assured voters Carter will win "if he runs."

Referring to Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., another potential challenger to Carter, she said, "I still can't believe Kennedy's going to run, but it looks like he is."

She also said: "I wish him all the luck in the world and I hope nothing happens to him."

The remark prompted a several people to boo, apparently because they thought the remark was a reference to Kennedy's assassinated brothers. To the boos, Miss Lillian replied, "That wasn't nice, was it? I don't know if you're booing me or him, but don't boo either of us."

Miss Lillian commented about the dozens of neatly printed Brown signs, saying she preferred the fewer, homemade placards decorated with hearts and declaring, "We Love Lillian."

She said that "signs don't mean a thing," adding: "If Jimmy runs, he's going to win, so relax."

Earlier, Miss Lillian had said that only if Jimmy Carter were too ill, would he stay out of a race for a second term.

Greeks plan full rush schedule

By MARK CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Rush. What is it? According the Interfraternity Councils publication, "Fraternities UMass, Amherst", rush is "the series of parties at which fraternities and sororities entertain and get to know people interested in Greek membership."

The UMass Interfraternity Council (IFC) has staffed a rush table on the concourse this past week, recruiting new members for the Greek system.

"The purpose of the table is to get people acquainted with the Greek area," said Brad Ringquist, IFC president. "Open houses will be hosted by the fraternities so the rushees can see where they would like to rush. After this week, the fraternities will rush on their own."

At the rush table, names of interested students are compiled into one central list and given to all the fraternities on campus. The houses then recruit the members themselves, either by closed or open invitation.

A closed rush is when friends of members are given bids to pledge the fraternity, while an open invitation includes all students on campus.

No rules govern the fraternity rush period. "Every house gets an equal shot at recruiting new members; there really isn't that much competition,"said Ringquist.

Tomorrow the fraternities will be holding open house for men wishing to rush. "After Tuesday, the names on the list will be contacted if the individual fraternities decide to do so," said Assistant Director of Greek Affairs, Kurt Kruegar.

"About two weeks later," Kruegar said, "Bids should go out to the rushees. If the rushee decides to accept the bid of a particular fraternity, he becomes a pledge." The bid is the final, official invitation to become a pledge of a house.

During the pledge period, pledges and members get to know each other through events which vary from house to house. At the end of the pledge period, initiation rites are held, inducting the pledge as a member of the fraternity.

The sorority rush, chaired by Erica Helfrich of the Pan Hellenic Council, will be held Sept. 17-24. The Pan Hellenic Council has set rush in four stages: sorority rush orientation, house tours, house parties, and fourth stage house parties.House tours and parties enable the rushees and sorority members to meet each other.

"The purpose of the parties is to give the rushees a chance to feel the atmosphere of the house," said Helfrich. "If the woman feels comfortable where she is, that is half of the game."

On the last day of the rush period, bids go out to the pledges. The previous evening, the rushees will have filled out forms stating in order of preference the two sororities they would like to pledge. The sororities also compile a list of who they would like to pledge their houses. The names are matched, and the bids are given to the rushees by the rush counselors.

"The women usually receive their first choice," Helfrich said.

Local shops thriving despite new malls

By PHIL LEMMAN
Collegian Staff

The opening of the $20 million Hampshire Mall last December seemingly marked another victory by the Pyramid Construction Corporation over downtown merchants, who feared they would be forced out of business.

But rumors of downtown Amherst's financial demise have apparently been exaggerated. Minna Lussier, a downtown merchant and currently the director of the Amherst Downtown Council, says it was a "mistaken assumption" that malls could corner the retail market in the area. She said "everybody was smiling" at a recent Chamber of Commerce meeting, and that by "playing our assets" and gearing attitudes and businesses to Five College students, the downtown area would remain a viable business force.

William McKeon, another downtown merchant and past director of the ADC, said the economic impact of the Hampshire Mall on the downtown area "has been overblown by the media...I'm inclined to be optimistic."

While the downtown area appears to be surviving the onslaught of new malls, the already established Mountain Farms Mall may be a different story. One store, the Vision Showcase, moved from the Mountain Farms Mall to the Hampshire Mall last week "because of an apparent deterioration of traffic," said store owner—manager Kent Whalen. He said business was not down at the old location but that a significant part of his business comes from customers dropping in, making traffic an important factor. Whalen also said that despite being open only three days, business is better at the new location and he expects the trend to continue.

The manager of Almy's Department Store in the Mountain Farms Mall reported a change in the traffic pattern, with emphasis moving to weekend shopping and away from the weekdays, but could not detect a decrease in the number of customers moving through the store.

Sales at the Mountain Farms Mall have also been affected, with varying results. Stores generally report an increase or decrease of about 10 percent from last year's sales but no consistent trend can be established from the information received.

Mountain Farms merchants did seem to agree that the new mall has brought more comparison shoppers into their stores from the Hampshire Mall.

The only store that reported a serious decline in sales in the Mountain Farms Mall was Woolco. An employee there, who asked to remain anonymous, said Woolco has seen "a fairly reasonable drop" in business but is hoping to regain some of the lost business when the novelty of the Hampshire mall wears off. The employee also joined other merchants in the mall complaining of "too many malls —— they're dividing the customers up too much."

Three stores in the Mountain Farms Mall have added branches in the new mall in hopes that they can retain their position in the market. Weathervane manager Barbara Cotsoridiz said, "It would be lost business not to have stores in both locations."

Mountain Farms promotion director Paul Bacon was unavailable for comment.

19-year-old drinker arrested

UMass police arrested a 19-year-old male Saturday for illegal possession of alchoholic beverages.

Arrested was Thomas E. Kerr, 19, of Arlington, who was apprehended by police in theJohn Adams tower driveway in the Southwest Residential Area.

Police also took a number of students into protective custody over the first weekend of the semester. They were:

--An unidentified 19-year-old male, taken outside John Adams tower for drunkenness.

--Two unidentified males, 19 and 21, outside Coolidge tower in Southwest.

--A male outside Crampton dormitory in Southwest.

A 30-year-old male on the Campus Center Concourse.

The first weekend of the semester historically keeps police busier than other weekends.

In another incident, an amplifier and stereo turntable valued at $600 were stolen from Greenough dorm through an unlocked door. Police have no suspects.

Police also said they had no suspects in Orchard Hill for a reported indecent exposure incident. A man was walking through the area sometime after midnight.

A 1979 Toyota was also reported to have windows vandalized.

Police also reported many other minor incidents.

Tickets for the Union Program Council production will go on sale September 17 at Tix and Union Records, both located in the Student Union, and at all Ticketron Outlets. Admission price is $7 for students and $8 for the general public.

Council sets dates for Greek activities

The UMass Pan Hellenic Council last week voted to hold formal rush Sept. 17-24.

The sisters of the eight houses on campus have recently been staffing a table on the Campus Center Concourse, encouraging women to rush their sororities.

During "rush" season, prospective candidates attend the open house of fraternities and sororities to see which house they would prefer to join.

The Greek Homecoming Parade is scheduled for October 19, 1979. The merchants of downtown Amherst and the Pan Hellenic Council are still discussing the exact time. Local merchants hope that the parade will draw more business to the downtown area, said Activities Chairwoman Sarah Roll.

"The Freshman Bonus Guide" will be distributed to all UMass freshmen starting today through Wednesday in the Dining Commons. The Guide is a joint Interfraternity Council-Pan Hellenic Council project which will enable freshmen to buy goods at discount prices in the Amherst area. A positive I.D. stating the student is a freshman is required.

Cuba summit condemns peace treaty

By SUSAN LINNEE
Associated Press

HAVANA —The summit conference of non-aligned nations ended yesterday with a resolution "energetically condemning" the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty and the Camp David talks that led to it.

The peace treaty condemnation, part of an overall final declaration, capped six hours of debate on one of the most divisive issues at the Havana conference. The declaration is to serve as a guideline for the movement over the next three years until the next summit, scheduled for 1982 in Baghdad, Iraq.

For six days, one more than was scheduled, delegates struggled to determine whether the movement should continue nonaligned or take the anti-imperialist tack proposed by Cuban President Fidel Castro.

In a closing speech, Castro, the conference host, said his stewardship of the movement over the next three years is "not to benefit Cuba." This evidently was a response to critics in the 95-member group who feared Castro would try to push the non-aligned movement closer to the Soviet camp.

After a night-long, 13-hour closed-door session, the summit delegates approved the overall declaration which contained a wide-ranging attack on U.S. foreign policy, but also preserved the movement's independent character.

Classical music lovers: a lonely lot at UMass

By ALLAN POTOFSKY
Collegian Staff

As I once again struggle to listen to a Mozart concert amid the beautiful strains of gentle pastoral noises that regularly grace the splendors of the Southwest Towers, I realize how lonely a classical music lover is doomed to be at UMass.

What a beleaguered lot we are, we who can do no socializing unless pinned under headphones blasting Brahms and Mahler. Even Bruckner (Hitler's musical answer to Nietchze) is no match here against the Clash and Lynyrd Skynyrd. Unlike every other breed of music listener we remain alone because of our music. Think of all the buddies you made around the blaring stereo! You become bonded in a rare form of comradarie, sharing that precious moment when the music clicks within both of you--it sounds so right so you just smile at each other and close your eyes and shake your heads.

A perverse bond that holds together such music lovers is the "in-group" syndrome: "Look what we're into and they aren't." All musical passions break down into: 1) populism-- if you can't cut loose and get down you're a snob and don't you tell me to turn it down you wimp; 2) progressivism--to be appreciated by the occasional buff insightful enough to enjoy fine musicianship, so why should I turn it down? I can't hear all the fine subtleties and anyway it's not that loud.

Enjoying music with others is also a form of egotism. Music identifies us by the records we collect and the equipment we play it on, and even by how loud we must play it to enjoy it. It's a label people wear with stubborn pride, particularly here at UMass.

I miss the chance to be so gloriously self-indulgent with music. But unfortunately, six different conductors and six different orchestras performing six different versions of Beethoven's "Erotica" cannot impress a world weaned to be thrilled by Pink Floyd.

Clifford said a moving company has been hired by the University Procurement Office to aid the library staff in the physical moving of the volumes and equipment through the South College tunnel.

As for immediate work on making the library safe for general access, "until the engineers have a chance to fix the facade, nobody is doing any work," Clifford said.

"At this point we have not retained any engineers to find out what has to be done," he said.

Agnoli, Inc. of Longmeadow and Gilbert Small, Inc. of Boston, two consulting firms hired after Loomis and Loomis, Inc. of Windsor, Conn. made their initial report of the hazards to pedestrians presented by the library, have yet to supply the University with a written report confirming the Loomis findings.

The two firms have confirmed the findings "orally and tentatively," Clifford said. The verbal findings were given on Tuesday, September 4. The evidence, Clifford said, was "startling" enough to bring the building closed for an undetermined length of time.

As for the future use of the library by students, Clifford said, "the point isn't how high your building is, the point is the information you've got. I don't think there will be any student who will be able to say they were denied access to the resources of the library," once the move is completed in about ten days.

The placement of the hay bales was suggested by Loomis and Loomis Inc, of Windsor Conn., Robinson said, as a safety precaution for those library employees, graduate students and faculty members who are using the South College tunnel connecting the library with South College. The tunnel is the only access to the library.

The Loomis firm was the first of three to warn of the danger of falling bricks from the library facade.

Library service is expected to be restored in two weeks, Wood said. First the former library, Goodell, must be cleaned and between 150,000 and 200,000 of the most heavily used books moved through the South College tunnel, Wood said.

The books to be moved were determined by a computer analysis of circulation, she said.

Also to be moved are the card catalogue, microfilm collection, reference collection and government documents which are contained in the 28-story building.

The Goodell library provides study space for 150, Wood said, while the former library had space for 3000 persons.

Wood said provisions will be made for addtional study space on other parts of campus. Graduate students and faculty members with material in library carrels will be able to retrieve their papers and books upon request, Richard J. Talbot, director of the libraries, said in a memo last week.

"To obtain carrel materials, please call 545-2622, identify yourself clearly and give us the number of your carrel; allow time for your requirements to be noted accurately," the memo read.

To pick up the materials, identification must be presented.

A priority in setting up the new facilities will be a reserved reading room, the memo said.

"We ask your cooperation in delaying the assignment of reserve reading until we can notify you that the reserve collection has been moved," it read.

Books may be returned to the South College loading dock between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., the memo said.

The other Five College libraries are available for student use.

"Please do not assign special library classes, however, until the University Library move has been completed," the memo said.

The move is expected to be completed in two weeks, Wood said.

★ Commission

commission is "unable at this early stage to draw any conclusions."

The commission has developed a computer system to form an information data base focusing on all state agencies awarding contracts, the number and type awarded and to whom, their cost to the state, and the cost of overruns and delays.

In its report, the commission estimates it will require $1,167,000 to conduct its investigations and cover its overhead expenses, although it says it cannot describe its activities as they relate to the investigations.

"To disclose the substance of its investigations at too early a stage would have unfair and adverse effects on the subjects of these investigations," the report states.

In short, the public is uninformed of the Ward Commission's activities.

In the event of a UMass library investigation, it is possible the public may not hear of the results until as late as June 30, 1980, when the commission makes its final report to the legislature.

Strife escalating world — wide

MIDEAST:

Political Zionism, according to apologists of the Arab cause, is the reason for the antagonism between the Arabs and Jews. Accordingly, if Israel were to be "de-Zionized," the cause for the split in the fraternity of these two Semetic peoples will disappear and peace will reign in the Middle East.

This assumption is based on the broad historical outline that Jews living in Arab countries were given full and equal rights under Islamic rule, that these Semitic cousins lived in peace and prosperity, that Zionism and the rise of Israel stressed differences which supposedly didn't exist between Arabs and Jews, and that once Israel no longer exists, the Jews and Arabs would return to the Semitic brotherhood which has prevailed since the advent of Islam in the 7th century.

The only problem with the above scenario is, it is a myth designed to arouse optimism in the misinformed. While not as widely known as the persecutions in Europe, attacks on Jews have taken place in the Islamic-Arab world ever since the Prophet Muhammed started his new religion.

We must go back to the time of Muhammad to understand the roots of the negative Muslim attitude toward the Jews.

Before his career as a prophet, Muhammad learned much of Judaism and Christianity in his native Mecca. He absorbed Judeo-Christian ideas and they later became the framework of his new religion, Islarm. When Muhammad emigrated to Medina, he came in daily contact with the Jewish tribes of that city. Apparently, the Jews didn't accept him and even mocked his teachings as a faint replica of the solid and pure monotheism of Judaism.

The Prophet, rejected by the Jews and derided by his false prophecy, took action. As a political and military leader of Medina, Muhammad choses three avenues of assault to challenge the Jewish position: forced conversion to Islam, eviction from Medina and physical extermination.

In a short time Medina and the whole Arabian Peninsula became Judenrein (Jew free). The bad taste Muhammad had for the Jews is expressed in the Quran, the Islamic holy book.

Indeed, in the lengthy Surah of the Cow Muhammad vilified the Jews as being "illiterate men who know nothing except lies and vague fancies," and Jews "have already heard the work of Allah and knowingly pervert it." Muhammad proclaimed that Jewish suffering was proof of Allah's ordinances which said that the Jews must be poverty stricken and suffer on earth. Moreover, as "unbelievers," the Jews would suffer an even more ingominious punishment in the hereafter.

As a result of Muhammad's anti-Jewish teachings, the Jewish minority in the Islamic-Arab world was subjected to many restrictions and hardships. Jews were forced to live in the mullah (a walled ghetto) many centuries before this innovation was enacted by the Roman Catholic Church in Europe. Jews were forced to pay a jizyah (poll tax) while Moslems were exempt. The Jews were given the status of dhimmi (protected minority) as long as they remained in their place as second-class citizens.

Today, in Syria, the 4,500 remaining Jews are still forced to live in the mullahs of Damascus, Allepo and Qamlishi. They are subject to travel restrictions, their passports are marked "Jews" in bright red ink and they are not allowed to emigrate. They are essentially hostages of the Syrian government.

Indeed, in February 1979, Palestinian Liberation Organization chief Yasir Arafat in Teheran hailed the common goals of the Islamic Iranian revolution and the Palestinian revolution as being "two revolutions in one revolution." He also declared on April 17, 1979 that the only was to capture Jerusalem is by Jihad(an Islamic holy war). It should also be noted that the PLO receives the bulk of its funding from the fundamentalist Islamic kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

It is in this context, vis a vis the PLO's connection to Islam and the history of Jewish persecution under Islam, which makes a myth of "Arab-Islamic toleration of Jews" and renders false the claims of Arab apologists that Jews can be tolerated while it is the "monstrous Zionists" which must be dealth with severely.

Painfully aware of their history, Jews are above all realists. They know that the sologan "democratic, secular Palestine where Muslims, Jews and Christians will live together in peace" is a deceptively simple euphemism for a renewal of the dhimmi status of the Jew. They also know Israel is already democratic and secular.

Thus, only the end of Islamic chauvinism will bring peace between Israel and her neighbors, not the continued fanciful notion of Arab brotherly love and toleration for the Jews which supposedly existed before the "Zionist" appeared on the scene. You see, it is just simply impossible to build a house of peace when the foundation is a myth as empty as air.

IRELAND:

"Those Evil Bastards!" A London headline screamed at the recent I.R.A. murder of Lord Mount batten. The 70-year-old Mountbatten, highly respected and loved throughout England, was killed when his fishing boat was blown up off the coast of northern Ireland. Also killed in the explosion were an elderly woman and two teenagers.

In a seperate IRA action, 18 British soldiers were killed with bombs as they patrolled the border between northern Ireland and Ireland.

There is no other word but murder for the tragic deaths of Lord Mountbatten and the others. Yet what the British people refuse to realize, with typical Victorian snobbery, is that the blame for the recent killings, claimed by the IRA terrorists, is shared equally by the British government as a result of callous and short-sighted British policy toward its closest neighbor.

As a terrorist organization, the IRA does not seek to bring down the British government. Nor does it desire to annihilate the Irish-Protestants. Its immediate goal, through violent terrorist plots against the English establishment, is to call attention to the pathetic conditions in northern Ireland.

Protestant discrimination against Catholics, a practice of government until the early 1970's, has caused severe economic deprivation among Irish-Catholic families who often have six or seven children. With no steady employment these people will never get up out of the Ulster ghettos where contempt for the world is breeded.

Britian's response to religious in-fighting has been to send in paratrooper to preserve peace and defend the outnumbered Catholics.

This move has done nothing but give the Irish-Catholics two enemies to fight instead of one.

The paratroopers are often more selective in their punishment than the Protestnats were. Withdrawl of the 13,000 troops now stationed in Ireland willnot ease tensions between the religious factions, nor will it feed the starving children. But their presence causes much more strife then it prevents.

The time for total British withdrawl from Ireland is long past. Mountbatten, a figure of British occupation for years, was singled out by the terrorists to call British attention to the plight of northern Ireland, and the IRA stronghold in that area.

The British response is critical.

If they continue with their short-sighted present policies, northern Ireland will be swamped with British paratroopers to "dredge the scum and eliminate the thugs and misfits who make up to the IRA," and the bloodly cycle will continue.

Instead, Prime Minister Thatcher and Parliament must realize that compassion, self rule, and economic aid will bring peace eventually, and that more guns will only bring new violence. The killing of Lord Mountbatten was a desperate call for help from a desperate people.

It is time that the British and the world heard their call.

Graduate student opposes draft bills

To the Editor:

Students should be aware of the two peacetime draft bills now before Congress.

The House bill, HR4040, will be voted upon by September 30, because draft provisions have been tied to the $40 billion military procurement bill, and the budget must, by law, be approved by then. This is the first time in history that draft proposals have not been considered as seperate pieces of legislation.

HR4040 calls for registration and classificaiton of males as they turn 18 after December 31, 1980. It requires recommendations be made on: automated, computerized registration from school enrollments; registration of women; giving the President authority to start inductions whenever he choses. Once registered, there is no upper age limit in this bill. Historically, after the last two major draft acts passed, the age groups required to register were expanded dramatically.

The Senate bill, S109, would require registration of all males aged 18 through 26 on January 2, 1980, with classifcation on January 1, 1981. The Senate has agreed to voted after the House does.

The penalty for noncompliance under both of these bills is five years in jail and/or a $10,000 fine. Unlike previous draft acts, which had to be renewed every four years, these bills are permanent and non-expiring. There was never a peacetime draft in the U.S. before September, 1940. President Johnson's drafting of 231,000 in 1965 and 382,000 in 1966 got us into Vietnam to the depth we became involved.

If you opposed these peacetime draft proposals, contact your Congressperson and Senators who represent your voting residence. Also, call Congressman Silvio Conte's Holyoke office, 532-7010, and state your oppostition to compulsory peacetime registration and/or service.

Judges needed for student court

To the Editor:

With the start of the new semester, I feel that it would be beneficial to briefly explain the Student Judiciary and its process of operation. The judiciary is a process in which students take part in the legal system of the student body and is designed to be a learning experience for all who participate.

The Student Judiciary is comprised of nineteen judges. Each residential area government as well as the Greek Council, the Stockbridge Senate and the Commuter Council select two judges. The Student Senate chooses three.

These judges preside over controversies that arise under the Constitution of the Undergraduate Student Government Association, the Student Code of Conduct and the General Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

There are numerous openings for judges and advocates this semester. I strongly urge anyone interested in these positions to contact me as soon as possible.

Library politics up in the air

To the Editor:

Upon the arrival on the campus this year, it has come to my attention, and undoubtedly to the attention of other students, grad students and professors of this university how ironious the condition with the library has become. This, of course, is to say nothing of the continuing dilapidation of our campus garage, campus center and several other structures on university grounds.

Speaking as a conscientious and devoted student of higher learning I question the politics employed by this university when it chose not to inform incoming and returning students of the library's continued problems and future implications. Among these future implicais that now we will have only one-quarter of the resources available in the past and incomplete facilities to utilize.

It seems highly unlikely that the facade of our library would suddenly approach hazardous conditions (it has been for sometime) since the opening of the school. Should the advertisements and past information to students concerning the university's "highest library" with over "1,000,000 volumes" hereafter be changed to the "highest library sometimes available" with "at least 250,000 volumes accessible."

I may not be speaking for all others, but the quality and all encompassing nature of this university's facilities had a profound influence on my decision to attnd this university.

We are spending an ever increasing amount of money to attend this institution. It seems not only illogical but wrong to deprive us of some 750,000 volumes and various services as a result of faulty construction of a library which often has a bearing on parent's and student's decisions in their choice of which institute would be best for his/her higher learning.

O's humble Sox, 16-4

BOSTON —Rick Dempsey slugged the first grand slam home run of his career and Gary Roenicke and Al Bumbry each hit homers Sunday as the Baltimore Orioles routed the Boston Red Sox 16-4.

Dempsey and Roenicke each drove in four runs and Bumbry and Rich Dauer scored three times to enable Steve Stone, 10-7, to gain the victory with relief help from Tim Stoddard.

Boston's Carl Yastrzemski, nearing the 3,000-hit career mark, lined a single to center leading off the eighth inning for his 2,999th hit, giving the 34,419 hometown fans at Fenway Park something to cheer about.

Baltimore reached Boston starter Mike Torrez, 14-11, for six hits and six runs before he gave up the mound, and three relief pitchers followed. The Orioles scored five runs in the fifth inning and got four more in the sixth, including Dempsey's shot. Roenicke's two-run homer in the second inning was his 25th of the year and Bumbry's solo shot in the sixth was his fifth.

Austin takes U.S. Open; spoils Lloyd's 5th crown

By CHRISTY BARBEE
Associated Press

NEW YORK —Sixteenyear-old Tracy Austin defeated four-time defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd 6-4, 6-3 yesterday to become the youngest ever to win the women's title in the U.S. tennis championships.

After the match, they met at the net, where the 24-year-old Lloyd, once a teen phenom herself, patted the youngster on the head.

Austin turned back the woman of whom she often has been called a mirror image. In so doing, she seems to have turned a page in women's tennis, spoiling Lloyd's bid for an unprecedented fifth U.S. Open crown.

Indeed, through their first set, it was the sort of baseline contest that might have been expected of them. Except for brief flurries at the net, the action was all from the end courts, where each hit back and forth and waited for the other to make an unforced error.

With the patience of one who knows she has years to be a champion, Austin won most of the long rallies.

Lloyd, at 24, is already a many-seasoned champion and one who has lost some of her interest in championship tennis.

Austin became the youngest women's winner here, a few months younger than Maureen Connolly was when she won in 1951. At that time, the U.S. championships were not open to professionals.

Austin, who won her first major championship after just two years on the pro tour, beat 14- year-old Andrea Jaeger, Kate Latham, Kathy Jordan, Sylvia Hanika and Wimbledon champion Martina Navratilova.

"Tracy was just too tough for me," Lloyd said during the awards presentation. "She had a great tournament, especially beating Martina."

There were four consecutive service breaks from the fifth through the eighth games of the opening set. But Austin held for 5-4 when a Lloyd forehand went wide. And next game she won the first set when Lloyd hit long.

Austin took a 3-0 lead in the next set, for a total of five games-won in a row. Lloyd broke back for 2-3 when Austin netted a backhand. But Austin got it right back for 4-2.

That was a desperately close game. Austin got break point at 30 when Lloyd hit a soft overhead cross-court too wide. Austin returned service long to make it deuce. Lloyd passed her next point for ad, but then hit a forehand wide for deuce again. Austin got the next ad and the game on two Lloyd backhand errors.

In the men's singles final, John McEnroe defeated Vitas Gerulaitis in straight sets, 7-5, 6-3, 6-3.

Minuteman Kevin Sullivan runs a punt back 94 yards for a touchdown during Saturday's scrimmage against Columbia.

Gridders fall to Columbia in exhibition

Columbia's Joe Cabrera scored two touchdowns to erase a 10–0 halftime deficit and lead the Lions to a 12–10 victory over the Minutemen in a scrimmage game played ;last Saturday at Alumni Stadium before a crowd of approximately 1,200.

"We've got a lot of work to do," commented UMass coach Bob Pickett after the loss. "We're young on defense and the experience of playing today will certainly help us."

One of the problems affecting the team throughout the ball game was the lack of ball control by the offense. "We've got to realize that we are not a big play football team and that we have to depend on long drives," Pickett said.

The Minutemen broke on top 6–0 with 7:51 gone in the first quarter when Kevin Sullivan returned a Columbia punt 44 yards for a touchdown. Sandro Vitiello made the extra point attempt good and the hometown heroes had a 7-0 advantage.

With 5:53 left in the second quarter, Vitiello missed a 31 yard attempt but came back five minutes and two seconds later to connect on a 26–yarder making it UMass 10, Columbia 0. It was the only field goal attempt Vitiello would connect on the afternoon, going 1 for 4 on the day.

The second half opened with a Columbia drive that lasted for eight minutes and three seconds and resulted in a Columbia TD via a Cabrera three yard run. The extra point attempt was no good and UMass led 10–6.

At the 2:21 mark of the final regulation period (an additional fifth quarter was played), Cabrera scored from six yards out to give Columbia a 12–6 lead which would not relinquish for the remainder of the contest.

One of the more positive aspects of the game from a UMass standpoint was the play of freshman halfback Richie Jenkins who collected 37 yards on 10 carries.

"He's certainly nothing less than we expected him to be and maybe more," commented Pickett.

Retrospecting on the game Pickett remarked, "I saw some good things happen the first half and obviously some bad things happened. The nice thing about it (the loss) is we're still 0–0."

The Minutemen open their regular season next Saturday when they travel to Philadelphia to meet the Wildcats of Villanova University.

Jets gunned down by Patriots, 56-3

By DICK BRAUDE
AP Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP]— "How's that for going from rags to riches? I wish I could bottle it," said New England Patriots Coach Ron Erhardt.

"Everything was clicking," said the rookie field boss of the Patriots after his team presented him with his first National Football League victory yesterday, a 56-3 thrashing of the New York Jets.

The rout, in which the Patriots set or tied eight team or individual records -including 597 yards total offense -was sparked by quarterback Steve Grogan, who tossed five touchdown passes.

Only a week ago, Grogan had been blamed for New England's overtime opening 16-13 loss to the Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers.

"So much was said and written I had to laugh at it," Grogan said. "I said to myself, 'What am I worried about?' The coaches have faith in me, and the players have faith in me, and that's all I have to worry about. It relaxed me."

Grogan, who threw three of the scoring passes to veteran Harold Jackson, tallied 315 yards as New England embarrassed the hapless Jets.

"They did it to us, and we did it to ourselves," said New York Coach Walt Michaels. "I just can't understand it. They gave us a good old-fashioned 'bleeping'."

Grogan connected with Jackson for 49 and 44 yard touchdowns in the first half and added a 28-yard touchdown pass to the veteran wide receiver in the third quarter before retiring for the day.

The five-year veteran quarterback also threw a 37-yard touchdown pass to Stanley Morgan and teamed up with Morgan later on a 50-yard pass-run touchdown play.

Halfback Andy Johnson had a two-yard touchdown run, and substitute quarterback Tom Owen, who replaced Grogan in the third quarter after the starter had completed 13 of 18 passes, added a 14-yard touchdown pass of his own to Don Westbrook in the fourth quarter.

Rookie Allan Clark completed the Patriots' scoring with a one-yard touchdown run late in the game.

New York, 0-2, had only a 30- yard field goal from Pat Leahy in the first quarter, as the Patriots' led 35-3 at halftime.

The Patriots' defense smothered Jets quarterback Richard Todd. New England's scoring was sparked by two interceptions, a fumble recovery and a partially blocked punt, all of which led to Grogan's touchdown passes.

Red Sox captain Carl Yasztrzemski collected hit no. 2,999. a ninth inning single, as the Bosox were crushed by the division leading Baltimore Orioles, 16? 4. See story p.14. (AP Laserphoto).

UM kickers get ready to defend in the Northeast

By DAVID BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team could have its problems this year because of a weakened front line. But Coach Russ"Cap" Kidd feels his defensive unit, "the best I've had since I've been here," will make the team respectable.

Coach Kidd is presently in the process of whittling down a team of 30 candidates to the 18 players he will have on his travelling squad. The team will travel to Brown University Tuesday night for a scrimmage before final cuts are made.

"I'm going to take 30 guys down there and ring 'em out," Coach Kidd said. "And I think we'll really know where we stand after that."

UMass will begin it's defense of the Northeast Regional Championship Saturday when it takes on Briddgeport in an away opener.UMass won the championship last year, capping off a 10-5 regular season with two wins in the post season tournament.

Actually, last season was a disappointing one for the Minutemen. After busting out of the starting block with a 7-1 record, including a shutout victory over Boston University which gave them the top position in New England and 13th in the nation, "Caps" Red Raiders hit a four-game losing streak which eliminated them from NCAA playoff contention. Only the last three wins of the regular season and the regional tournament victories saved the season from becoming a complete washout for UMass.

This season UMass will be without the services of last year's starting front line of Joel Mascolo, Tasso Koutsoukos (the team's leading scorers), and Anthony G. Dias. Co-captain Mascolo graduated, Koutsoukos signed a professional contract with the NASL Chicago Sting, and Dias left UMass early last spring and decided not to return.

Coach Kidd said he had hoped to strengthen his front line with a promising new recruit and Dias, a veteran of proven ability. But the new recruit (who the coach did not wish to discuss) and Dias suddenly dropped their plans to come to UMass.

Tenants appeal eviction notices

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

Six Colonial Village tenants last night decided to appeal a ruling last week by Hampshire District Court Judge Sean Dunphy which would have forced them to vacate their apartments.

The eviction notices served last summer to 42 tenants would have been carried out within two weeks if they failed to negotiate a new lease with the landlord.

The tenants will also file damage suits, group members indicated. The remaining 36 tenants have already moved or been allowed to remain at the complex under a new lease or under the old tenant–negotiated lease while paying higher rents.

Aside from court decisions, the appeal raises several issues surrounding on–going disputes between tenants and landlords.

The impetus for the case was the issuance of 42 eviction notices given in July to tenants who had failed to notify landlord Louis R. Cohn of their intentions to renew their leases or vacate apartments.

Central to this issue is whether the tenants who did not sign a new lease had the right to remain in their dwellings after September I under the old lease. Tenants claim they were never informed of a rent increase as was state in their old leases.

Mary Wentworth, spokeswoman for the Colonial Village Tenants Union, said the eviction notices were invalid because of a renewal clause negotiated last year which gives current tenants first option to renew their leases. Also negotiated last year was a clause requiring the landlord to notify tenants of any change in rent and/or lease modifications.

Wentworth said notices of a rent increase were provided in late May, but a tenant's union survey indicated only some of the tenants received them. The landlord's agent, Patrick L. Kamins, testified his office had no record of when the notices were sent.

"It is no small coincidence that those who were active in the union, and those living under subsidized housing, did not receive their notices," Wentworth said.

Because some tenants did not receive notices of the 10–12 percent rent increases, Wentworth said it was a violation of the lease negotiated with Allen Cohn, the landlord's son. That lease states tenants must receive 90 days notice and have 60 days to respond on their intentions to move or stay.

Carol Kamins, wife of the owner of Kamins Real Estate, said the eviction notices were sent so Cohn could find out how much rentable property he had. "Housing in Amherst is, at best, difficult. How can we help new tenants, many of them students, find a place to live if we don't know what we have to deal with? It makes us look very unprofessional," Kamins said.

Steven L. Baumohl, the attorney for the Tenants' Union in the case, said one point of contention is whether the 42 tenants were living under their negotiated lease or under a new lease drawn up by Cohn's attorney, Richard J. Howland. "Clearly, the new lease is a landlord lease which is not fair to the other party in the contract — — the tenant," Baumohl said.

Howland claims the Tenants Union lease was only renewable for one term, while the Tenants Union says it is renewable each year, as long as the tenant doesn't violate the lease.

The differences between the Howland lease and the union lease "are like night and day," said Wentworth. For instance, she said, the Howland lease is written in "legalese," the Tenant's Union lease is written in "laymen's" terms; the Howland lease makes no provisions for notification in change of lease and rent increases and time of response from tenant.Also the Tenants' Union lease holds the landlord to a 90–day notice with a 60 day response; the Howland lease does not include the owner's obligations in providing basic necessities and sanitary provisions, the union lease includes responsibilities of the landlord to provide for adequate running water, electrical outlets, a store and other facilities and includes state–mandated sanitary cods.

Another major point in the dispute is the question of who must sign the lease. The landlord's lease states all occupants of an apartment must sign. The union disagrees because, Wentworth said, "The person or persons originally signing the lease should have autonomy." She explained a hypothetical situation in which a tenant might invite a friend to live with him after signing the lease and then want the person to move out. Under the landlord's terms the friend would have as much legal right as the original signer.

Students urged to write to fight draft approval

By DEBORAH LESSER
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate Student Senate officials yesterday asked students to help fight passage of a House of Representatives bill containing references to renew draft registration and urged students to support an amendment to eliminate these references. references.

According to Section 812 of a $37-billion weapons authorization bill, HR 4040, all males turning eighteen years of age after December 31, 1980 will be eligible for registration, to begin January 1, 1981.

U.S. Respresentatives will vote tomorrow on an amendment introduced by Colorado Representative Patricia Schroeder to delete this section from the bill, said Senate co-President Rich LaVoice.

Students have been asked by letters from the Student Center for Educational Research to urge representatives to vote in favor of the Schroeder Amendment before tomorrow's vote, LaVoice said.

"Our purpose in mobilizing students is to make the legislature aware that we are watching what they are doing and how they vote," said LaVoice.

"Legislators will open their mail and listen to their constituents," said Arvid Muller of SCERA's Legislative Team. But, he added, widespread student support is "crucial" for any significant action to take place.

Muller said women as well as men should get involved because they may be eligible for the draft in the near future.

Out-of-state students are also encouraged to participate in the campaign as SCERA's efforts are being reproduced on college campuses nationwide, said LaVoice.

Efforts are being made to contact as many representatives as possible although emphasis is on Massachusetts Congressman Edward Boland, Springfield, and representatives from other states who are still uncommitted, LaVoice said.

"People's responses can really tip a congressman one way or another," said Muller.

According to LaVoice, the response from most students has been favorable and many are doing whatever they can to promote the amendment's passage.

All efforts are now aimed at its passage tomorrow but if not approved, lobbying must be extended to large-scale rallies in Washington and letters to Senators, said LaVoice.

Fonda, Hayden will give campus speech

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Social-activist, actress Jane Fonda, 42, and her husband Thomas Hayden, 40, have agreed to a campus appearance September 30 in the Curry Hicks Cage, to be sponsored by the UMass Distinguished Visitor's Program.

Program Vice-chairman Howard Goldman said yesterday plans for a speech by the political couple were finalized last Friday afternoon after eight months of phone calls and letter-writing.

The event, he said, will be open only to UMass students for an entrance fee of $1. Cage capacity is 4,200 seats. University ID's will be requested to purchase tickets sold at a location to be announced, and will be required for entrance.

"It's a UMass event, all costs are to UMass, UMass people should get first bid," Goldman said. "That's only fair."

"We'll do our best to get a ticket to anybody who wants one," he said.

Total DVP expenses, including the couple's fee, travel, lodging and promotion, will be $4,500, he said. The program has a $26,000 annual budget, financed by a $1.50 per student yearly fee.

It contributes $5,000 yearly to Martin Luther King Week and $10,000 to International Women's Week.

"I think to bring a good speaker to a campus makes the campus feel better," Goldman said.

Fonda and Hayden's UMass appearance will be one of many included in their nationwide "barnstorming" tour to run from September 23 to October 25. The tour will include a dozen key presidential primary states and serve to advocate issues of the Fonda-Hayden-supported Campaign for Economic Development.

The campaign is a leftist grass roots political organization founded by Hayden in California after he lost the 1976 U.S. Senate Democratic primary to then-incumbent Senator John V. Tunney.

Nationalists given clemency

Associated Press

Four defiant Puerto Rican nationalists granted clemency by President Carter left U.S. jails yesterday where they had spent at least a quarter century for terrorist acts in Washington, D.C.

Supporters said all four were heading to a Chicago rally to renew pleas for independence for their Caribbean homeland.

"The fight for freedom is always a long fight and always a hard fight. I have nothing to be disappointed about," Oscar Collazo told waiting supporters as he stepped from the federal penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kan.

"I have a great satisfaction. We have succeeded in our struggle for victory. We are stronger than ever, more committed than ever," said Lolita Lebron as she emerged from the federal prison at Anderson, W. Va.

Tip ties Ted to nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said Monday that the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination belongs to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy if he wants it.

O'Neill, breaking a long silence on the subject of a possible Kennedy—Carter showdown, told reporters:

"I don't think that he (Kennedy) could be denied the Democratic nomination if he were to run."

The speaker also said that if Kennedy does run, Carter should not expect to get much help from members of Congress from New England.

He sidestepped a direct question on whether he himself would support the president or his Senate colleague from Massachusetts in the event of such a contest. "I support the party every day of the week," the House leader said.

Rhodesian charter sought

LONDON (AP) - Nationalist guerilla leaders met face to face yesterday with the enemy - the Zimbabwe Rhodesian government - at the opening of the British-sponsored constitutional talks widely billed as a last chance to avert widespread war in southern Africa.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington urged both sides to reach a compromise, saying, "the price of failure would be further prolonged bloodshed." He asked them to focus on a new constitution for Zimbabwe Rhodesia that will decrease the power given to the white minority, which accounts for 230,000 persons out of a population of 7.2 million.

New oil, gas wells needed

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) - An American geologist yesterday called for international efforts to develop new oil and gas wells, saying the world probably has as much undiscovered fuel in the ground as has been discovered so far.

"There is a great urgency to search for and find new oil reserves to establish enough lead time" to develop other energy sources, said Michel T. Halbouty of Houston, in a report to the 70-nation World Petroleum Conference.

'Instant German' helps fulfill language core requirement

By LEIGH ANNE VARNEY
Collegian Staff

Instant German? Is that a new brand of coffee? Or maybe a new kind of beer from the importers of Heineken?

Look again. Those attention-grabbing posters plastered on the walls of UMass, illustrating what appears to be a blonde-haired, full-blooded Deutschland citizen complete with dirndle dress and a corn field, are not advertising coffee or beer, but rather, a new approach to learning the German language.

Satisfying one of the two, year-long foreign language requirement for CASIAC majors (level 110-120), "Instant German" or "German through Reading" boasts a curriculum which does not "waste your time teaching you anything you can't use."

"UMass is the first and only University in the entire United States to try such a program," said German department teaching assistant Peter Harbo, who began work on the program last spring.

Because of the program's success this past summer, tested about on graduate students, Harbo said he is optimistic about undergraduate program involvement.

"Before puberty is really the best time to learn a language," he said, "so obviously nearly all college students find it difficult to learn a new language and the current method doesn't seem to help."

Instead of the usual emphasis on memorization and speech pronunciation, "Instant German" offers an "inductive method so that students can become acclimated to a language before they have to speak it," he said.

In the beginning phase of the three phase course, students use a spiral bound text which they begin to read and "through intelligent guessing", can understand what is stated, Harbo explained.

Passive learning in which German cassettes are used, compose the second phase, he said.

By the final phase, students should be speaking German, based on all the previous reading material.

The original program, entitled "German through Reading", was developed by Professor Lore Armeleo-Popper, 65, of the Goethe Institute in Rome. The program was designed "for people with difficulty in auditory memory," Harbo said.

Harbo set Armaleo-Popper, a native-born German who emigrated to Rome during the reign of Hitler, when she was a visiting UMass professor last spring.

Harbo, Armaleo-Popper and department teaching assistants Henry Lea, Gertrude Geiger and Dianne Doesan organized the UMass program.

"Siegfrid Bauschinger, Chairman of the German Department gave the go-ahead, allotting the money for the posters and course materials," Harbo said, "But this is a very unusual TA venture."

The course originally was planned to have three sections with 30 students in each. However, once the posters hit the UMass campus, sparking student interest, another section was instituted. The current program involvement is 120.

The possibility of such a program being developed within other language departments is distinct, Harbo said.

The poster campaign, he admitted, is "a takeoff on gut courses and on sexism," but it also parallels the German belief that "Americans have no sense of tradition. Everything is instant and fast," he explained.

Mr. Harbo has received several calls from irate feminists, and apologizes wholeheartedly for any offense the posters may have caused.

Budget cuts hit language lab

By BOB CARROLL
Collegian Staff

"Catastrophic" is how acting Dean of Fine Arts and Humanities Richard Noland describes the 1979-80 language lab budget which has forced the curtailment of services, and the cancellation of popular hours.

Calling the state-mandated budget cuts "the most drastic ever," Noland also said that students will be the real losers if the present situation continues.

"We simply do not have the personnel to run our labs the way they should be run. Because of our catastrophic budget we just can't continue the service we had in the past," he said.

A few students in language classes are now preparing to circulate a petition protesting the reduced lab hours and services. However, this course of action was passed off as "futile" by most of the unhappy students interviewed at the language lab in Bartlett Hall. One student, who asked not to be named, seemed resigned to his fate: "Look, man, when you're at a big school you have to expect things like this," he said.

Noland cited a lack of paid student help in the labs as a problematic result of the cut. For instance, Bartlett lab now has only one student employee instead of two. This lack of help has had a direct afect on hours. All night hours, which were from 7 to 10 on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday have been eliminated as well as Sunday afternoons from 2 to 5.

Noland said, however, that an official of the state has promised more money will be given for programs here within a week or two. If additional funds do materialize, first priority will be given to restoring the evening hours, and reopening the lab take-out system, Noland said.

When asked if Governor Edward J. King might be responsible for this cut, Noland was hesitant. "There are several factors that have played into this by coincidence or bad luck." said the Dean. "So, in all fairness I do not want to place the blame on Governor King. After all, the policy of drastic budget cuts began under Dukakis, not King."

Although the department is expecting a future staff enlargement, the sign hanging in Bartlett Hall best summarizes the staff's helpless position: "We are overburdened because we are understaffed -- please bear with us."

UMass police are investigating $600 worth of vandalism at Hampshire Dining Commons at 12:25 a.m. yesterday. Three plate glass windows were broken in the incident.

Also reported to police was a bicycle stolen from Patterson dormitory in the Southwest Area at 9:48 p.m. Sunday.

Stacked hay may allow book transfer

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

Some of the 1,000 bales of hay treated with a fire-retardant chemical, X-12, are expected to be placed on the west side of the library today, according to Mary Kowalski of the UMass News Bureau.

The hay is being placed there to cushion any bricks which might fall off the library's west side.

As soon as all the bales are in place, approximately 250,000 books are scheduled to be transferred from the main library to Goodell library via an underground tunnel leading between the two libraries.

Bids for the job went out yesterday and the results should be known sometime this afternoon, said Jake E. Bishop, UMass director of procurement.

The books will be moved through the tunnel as soon as all the bales of hay are in place, Kowalski said.

"The problem now is getting enough hay to cover the area," Kowalski said. "One thousand bales of hay are needed, while in reality only half that amount is readily available now," she said.

The hay is being obtained from the Amherst Farmer's Exchange. The fire-proof chemical was tested and recommended by Hamden Color and Chemical of Springfield.

It will take 10 days to move all the books once the moving is started, library director Richard J. Talbot said yesterday.

Bicycles chained to campus ramps, such as the one at the Graduate Research Center, are posing problems for handicapped students wishing access to buildings. Paul Appleby, of Handicapped Student affairs, urges students not to park their bikes on ramps.

Legal drinkers patronize town bars

By DALE ROMBERG
Collegian Staff

Students visiting the Blue Wall last weekend probably noticed a dramatic change in the number of people there. The bar, unlike town establishments, is suffering from the effects of the raised drinking age.

The installment of a cover ng wall at the Blue Wall to accommodate minors did not attract the 18- and 19-year olds as expected, assistant manager Peter Connolly said.

"On nights that would normally bring in about $1,000 or more, only$500, if that, was made (per night) last week," Connolly said. Because of this decrease, the bar has implemented a cover charge on band nights.

Connolly said since the University does not allow the Blue Wall to have any two-for-one specials or designated hours for cheaper drinks, students would prefer to patronize the Pub or Poor Richard's.

Blue Wall business, however, may improve because of decreased patronage at the Hatch. Art Edelstein of the Union Program Council attributes the Hatch's reduction in customers to the fact that the Hatch will not serve liquor and will seldom have entertainment.

"Because of the poles at the Hatch, it is a basically difficult room to produce events," Edelstein said.

"We're trying to utilize the Blue Wall for all age groups, with the small drinking section beyond the partition. You have to be 20 to go in there and you can't leave it with a drink," he said.

During the day the drinking area in the Blue Wall extends as far as the permanent division between the bar's beer and mixed drink sections, and up to its opposite end. At night, the entire room is separated equally by a temporary partition. Connolly suggested that better talent might attract more people, but added, "I don't know if Stevie Wonder could pack the place."

Connolly denied the Blue Wall's closing. If patronage continues to decrease, he said, the bar "wouldn't be open as many hours, maybe only for lunch. The staff would be cut back. As it is, the reduction in business in the Hatch and the Blue Wall knocked out student employment by 50-75 percent. The students stand to lose."

Private bars in town are not experiencing as noticeable a decrease in the volume of customers since the drinking age became effective April 16. Pub manager Jerry Jolly said that while business is still good, it is not as good as it has been in the past.

Assistant manager Keith Fowler said "Monday and Tuesday of the first week were very slow compared with last year." He attributed these slow nights to the chaos of moving and settling in for the semester. "Wednesday and Thursday were pretty good, and the Friday Happy Hour drew a very big crowd," he said.

UMass Athletic Administrator Victor Fusia, owner of the Time Out bar, said his business is just as good a business as ever. "We didn't feel it (the age hike) a bit. The clientele during the day are really the businessmen from the town, but at night the students seem to take over," he said.

Fusia said he is not planning anything special to accommodate the minors. "There is already a good cross-section of people in here; it's a fun place because they make their own fun," he said.

The Time Out has had to turn away many out-of-staters because their licenses were not adequate proof of age. Managers at Dastardly Dan's, the newest bar in Amherst, are also carefully checking identification. "We keep up with police as to how kids could falsify ID on a Massachusetts driver's license. It's not as easy with an out-of-state license," bar owner Paul Noetzel said. Noetzel said he is leery of accepting a non-picture license with a UMass ID card.

Stadium Liquors, on University Drive, accepts out-of-state licenses, but owner Eugene Sojka said he can tell when someone is buying for a minor. "They usually get four different kinds of beer, or an assortment of other liquors. Legally, I can't refuse to sell him/her anything, but I do warn of the possibilities of getting caught," Sojka said.

Poor Richard's manager Mark Scyocurka said a stamp indicating a person's age was used on slow nights during the summer. But, he said, sales to minors would be harder to control now that most of the students are back to school. Business for the disco has only declined about 10 percent Scyocurka said. Poor Richard's attracts an older crowd, he said.

Center renovations total $300,000

By KARIN HOLMES
Collegian Staff

Students blinded by the new bright sign in the Campus Center coffee shop are in for some more changes in the Hatch, Blue Wall and Top of the Campus.

Since July1, when the former food service corporation contract expired, the Campus Center Food Services has been run by university management which includes $300,000 in renovations to the facilities.

"There's an internal budget to pay for the Campus Center Food Services renovations and an additional $300,000 given by Auxiliary Services will be paid back within a five-year period," said Larry Ruth, chair of the Food Service Committee.

Board of Governor's member John Furbish termed the renovations a "facelift." "There's a new sign which cost $600 and was paid for by the Coca-Cola Co. and new awnings," he said. "The locations of things have been moved and some prices are different. Coffee has even gone down. Soon there'll be new uniforms, too. All together the cost of the Coffee Shop additions add to about $5,000," he said.

Richard Ellis, newly-appointed director of the Campus Center Food Services said, "My first priority is tomake the Coffee Shop operationally the best, which will include changes not only on the exterior but the interior as well. The way the food is cooked and served is also going through alterations. Later will come more additions to the decor like plants and pictures."

Another Campus Center Food Service, The Blue Wall bar, also has a different appearance. "The rug has been removed and a seperate section for the over-20 crowd is being constructed in what is called Room 210C," Furbish stated.

"The new focus is on entertainment and a new menu. There will be a stage put up and new tables so that the Blue Wall will be for everyone. For now the hours will remain the same.

To help with these new transitions, I've hired new managers, Ron Reed, Beverages; Ralph Johnson, Top of the Campus; James McVey, Catering, and Miles Seaver, Coffee Shop," Ellis said.

Problems at the Blue Wall, spurred by the lower drinking age, promoted a change there, Ruth said. "There is a definate lack of customers which is brought about by the 20 drinking age. Where to put the bar is the biggest problem. On Friday the people in the bar complained because they couldn't see the band so we moved the wall to the middle of the room and Saturday it seemed to work better. An estimated $300,000 will be lost this year in sales," he said.

"Core killers" can be fun

By JO ANNE BUTLER
Collegian Staff

Was Lizzie Borden really a parent abuser? Is hang gliding as risky as everyone claims? And just what is a sundog anyway? If you have ever pondered any of these subjects, you are in luck.

The answer to these and many other questions may be found in campus classrooms this year. Core requirements for university degrees can be fun, you know.

Unusual classes this fall range from the mind stretching Madness in Literature, taught by professor Michael Lavine, to Frisbee fun. Both classes still have open seats for students.

If your cheeks are in need of exercise, why not try a glassblowing course offered by the art department? And for those students having troubles fantasizing, there is a Fantast and World Literature taught by professor Maria Tymoczko that fulfills a "C" core.

Think you are imagining things? Maybe not. Professor Warren Anderson's Ghosts and Apparitions course may be able to enlighten you.

According to Anderson who began teaching the course because of his fancy for ghost stories, two factors make the course interesting. First, ghosts present us with "the only link we have with whatever is beyond death, outside of religious links."

Editorial/Opinion

Third World pages dying?

There is currently a serious crisis in the Third World community here at UMass.

Several years ago, concerned Third World students claimed that the Collegian was not doing enough to inform the university community about the goals and aspirations of non-white students, especially blacks.

The black students demanded special pages. The Collegian refused to allow a specialized group to dictate policy. The Collegian's reasons were that to fragment the publication into separate sections would set a dangerous precedent thereby allowing any group to assert unreasonable "editorial policy" demands on the paper.

Black students took over the Collegain facilities and disrupted the daily activities of putting out a newspaper to some 25,000 students.

Out of the conflict and lengthy negotiations, blacks won their demands and created a useful segment in the Collegian called Black Affairs.

Last semester, Black Affairs was grossly understaffed. This placed pressure on the two student editors who did most of the work putting out this bi-weekly segment.

Stephen Klein

The editor of Black Affairs, Terrel Evans, and assistant editor, Renee Mobley, wrote several urgent letters requesting that Third World students get involved in the newspaper. The Third World community was unresponsive, however. And those students who did respond were not always dependable.

Both of these editors will not return and did not establish any method of replacement.

The problem is this: If there are no black or Third World students interested in learning how to put out a newspaper on a daily basis, with Black Affairs as a bi-weekly segment, then these pages are destined to fizzle out.

I don't think this can be blamed solely on racism or sexism within the confines of the Collegian. But, rather, a narrow-minded attitude held by many black and Third World students that to work alongside white students in the Collegian is not worth their time or energy.

Carol Rosenberg, a writer for the Collegian and Journalism studies major, said, "In my three years in the Journalism department, I only saw three Third World students, and one was Dorothy Clark."

Dorothy Clark is now working with the Springfield Daily News and also served as Managing editor of the Collegian.

Why are there no Third World students working for the Collegian?

Mall will be metropolis in 1984

Last night my apartment mate dragged me along to see a movie. After he offered to pay I consented despite the fact I had literally hundreds of thousands of things to do. We got to the shopping mall where it's playing and we're an hour early. Goddamn, I have to spend an hour in there.

Chuck Edgerly

We look at all the tawdry department store clothing and the other consumer items (soon to be unsold "bric a brac" and "knick knacks" at tag sales). Then the thought comes to my head that the shopping mall is becoming a new social gathering point. Ever since the campfire brought men together, they've congregated and had markets. Markets became the centers of villages, towns, cities, etc.

In the 1950's a new phenomena arose: the shopping mall; where one could buy anything conveniently. They all had huge parking lots to furnish people with a place to leave their vehicles. The advent of the shopping mall brought to a shambles the previous center of a town, known as the "center of town" of "downtown".

Now the oil companies (I wonder if there is any one person or group of people responsible for the actions of the oil companies) are forcing change on our culture by decreasing the supply of ... well, you know that one. As this situation worsens, people will have to decide whether to go to the mall, where one trip will take care of all food-clothing needs (although inadequately - but people's expectations of quality will decline as they always have so it won't matter) or else drive all around and not have enough fuel for other things.

The decision appears obvious. The shopping mall will be the new center of commerce. Industry will set itself up there. Already (and may I add, just recently) bars and night spots are part of the mall setting. Housing will abound in the immediate area. Soon, this housing will be deemed inadequate and will cause two things: inner city slums and flight to the suburbs. New suburbs will be created, isn't that a trip? A new mode of transportation will be devised so that those fed up people too near the mall will be able to live in out-lying areas and still get to the "city".

Of course, town goverments will relocate to the mall area, perhaps even occupy an abandoned mall store. Try to imagine the Paperback Booksmith store as the Town Hall or Bradlees as the home of the fire department. A whole bureaucracy will arise, to be ruled by the owners of the malls. Do you want a piece of the new aristocracy? Get stock in these places. Sacrifice those scruples! How do you think our current economic elite made it -- by buying into the future before it was impossible to get.

Can you imagine some of the implications of this theory? Mall parking will soon cost money just as it costs money to park in Boston. There'll be more police to enforce the law in this newly congested area. And Law! New laws will be enacted to deal with the unprecedented crimes that will undoubtably occur. Speed limits, loitering, litter, crass personal crimes -- all this will happen in MALLS. It may be interesting to end this thing with my pre-mall era (Webster, 1957) dictionary's definition of mall: a shaded walk or public promenade. From this lofty concept has been created this most ugly monster.

Chuck Edgerly writes very well.

Baker resident angered by summer-time painters

To the Editor—

When I returned to Baker this semester I saw something that has gotten me very mad. Donald J. Pelkey, our area management coordinator, in all of his brilliance, had every door in the dorm painted brown.

This wouldn't be upsetting to anyone that hasn't ever seen the dorm before, but to those of us who have seen the dorm it was. Many of these doors had very elaborate paintings on them. I put my money, many hours of time, and hard work into that door. Then some dimwit comes along with a roller and paints over it.

Now to top off the painting of the doors he has to paint the walls. Anyone who has ever been to Baker has to know it has the best wall murals on campus. These murals have been around for years, why can't they just paint around them? He's already ruined the fourth and third floor paintings and the second floor is next.

The people that lived in the dorm last year painted the walls just so the paintings wouldn't get wrecked. Now they're being painted again and there's no reason for it. Last year someone had defaced a stairwell with a four foot drawing of a penis and that never got painted over from the day I was here till the day I left. If anyone has the power to stop Pelkey from painting over the rest of the walls, I sincerely hope they will.

You call that fixing up a dorm?

He also painted the inside of every room a dull white. I mean this money could be spent on many other things in Baker.

For instance, in most of the showers you have to run around to get wet and that's only if there's hot water. Half the lights in the hall are broken, the water bubblers barely drip, the heaters don't work in the winter and you can't shut them off in the warm weather. Also, we were promised a weight room that we never saw, and the outside door locks need to be fixed.

Come on, Mr. Donald J. Pelkey, Let's get your act together and do something good for the residents of Baker.

Charles Mullins

Students should organize to end problems on campus

To the editor:

If every student were to gather in front of the Whitmore Administration building Friday around noon and demonstrate against the present conditions of this university (including the situation of the library, the raise in tuition and the decline in high quality educational opportunity, the budget cuts, and all the many more problems associated with being a student in a public rather than private institution), we would surely make a powerful statement. How 'bout it?

Unless there is a massive organization of student energies the present situation shall certainly worsen. If every person who was denied entrance to a class they needed or wanted were to write the Governor, their Congresspersons, the Board of Trustees, the Administration, and make known their anger, perhaps it could result in something positive.

Supplement to the Collegian

The one common denominator for all UMass students, be they from rural Ashfield, metropolitan Springfield or just downtown Amherst, is home. Although about 60 per cent of the students climb the hill, ride the elevators and cross North Pleasant Street to go home, about 40 percent leave the University environment for sororities and fraternities, apartments and houses.

Home is where you plant your palm tree

By PAUL REDMOND
Collegian Staff

"My palm tree" was the answer when I asked Peter Barkin, a resident assistant of Patterson dormitory, what was the most significant part of his room. And it was.

The addition of the palm tree at a cost of $14 is not the only bright point to the dwelling. I found there many of the usual components of a UMass dormitory room, but in addition to the tree, a double bed covered with a king size comforter and throw pillows, an intricately designed and hand-made lamp constructed by Barkin along with comci strip wall paper all add to the unique quality of the room.

Off campus living: more for less

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Staff

Summer is legitimately with us until September 23, but most people will acknowledge that fall has already fallen. In fact, for most of us the dawn of autumn is signified by the mass exodus of students from hometowns to colleges and universities nationwide. Traditionally, the migration is from home to dormitory but this year at the University of Massachusetts, some 40 percent of the student population will commute from apartments and houses to school.

The reasons for moving off campus fun the gamut from financial to social.

"You get more but you pay the same," said Steve Garfield, a senior business major, of the contrast between dorm and apartment costs.

Garfield shares a three-bedroom apartment just outside of the Southwest Residential Area with housemates Fred Berkowitz and Ken GrandPre.

The advantage of the spatial aspect of apartment life are evident when touting the commodious kitchen and living room, and charming pantry which boast more comfort and better atmosphere than any dorm room could ever provide. A large, sun-drenched backyard and front porch are benefits no dorm can offer.

Comparable-to-dorm price with more living and breathing space were only two advantages of off-campus living cited by Garfield. Added GrandPre, a senior marketing major, "It's going home, not going back to a dorm. The privacy is really nice."

Home-cooked meals also tend to be more appetizing than dining commons food, both also said.

Learning responsibilisty is also a part of living off-campus. Dorm life tends to be as divorced from reality as possible, both said. The dilemna of meeting monthly bills and rent payments "helps you to grow up," said GrandPre.

Andy Santos, a senior engineering student who is sharing a farm house in Shutesbury with four friends, cited the necessity of "a more realistic seting of where I'd be living" as impetus to move off-campus.

While it seems that advantages to living off-campus are many, disadvantages are few, at least for those who have chosen off-campus living. Off-campus living is sometimes more expensive, but its advocates claim privacy and quiet are worth the price difference.

Asked if he could name a disadvantage to living off-campus, GrandPre responded, "The university tends to ignore off-campus students," and added quickly, tongue-in-cheek, "but I don't know if that's a disadvantage or not."

Life with 'sisters'

By LEIGH ANNE VARNEY
Collegian Staff

From the very first moment I noticed the difference. Not only were the faces familiar but each and every one helped me move my things into the house. That's right, a house. Not a dorm room, or an apartment, but a real honest-to-goodness house complete with dining room, kitchen, living room, den, bathrooms and study lounge.

But most important of all, a place you could really call home.

I have lived in the house for about one week and already I feel so adjusted and comfortable. At the end of a long day of classed I come home to a home, instead of four cement walls with a bed and a desk. I have room to breathe and move about without having to worry about having my dorm or apartment key with me. Meals are a quick jaunt down to the dining room where real food awaits.

The result was a four semester effort which culminated this semester when Barkin was hired as an R.A. and received a double single room.

If you have a roommate perhaps some of Beth Schnitzer's and Athena Neko's ideas will fit your need. These women, residents of John Quincy Adams tower, had a "Z-shaped" room as their model to work with. To begin with they painted their room yellow, dark brown and beige.

The paint job would lead anyone to wonder whether or not they shouldn't be painting professionally. After painting, Beth added a couch, rug and assorted items from home.

Inexpensive cork and mirrors purchased at the mall give a bright effect to their room. To conserve space, they removed one desk and bunked their beds with matching blankets.

Athena obtained some produce crates from a supermarket and painted them to match the room. Although some of their furnishings were costly, several were free or inexpensive.

All UMass dormitory residents are provided a desk, bed, lamp and bookcase. Depending on the size and shape of your room, many design ideas can be used. Plants are one of the most effective decorations that give any room a comfortable look. Posters and pictures ranging from murals to magazine clippings are among those most commonly used. If you have run out of ideas, perhaps you can take some of these as or advice. Or just walk around any dorm and use other people's ideas to form some of your own.

Peter Barkin relaxes in the living area of his room in Patterson dormitory, in the Southwest Residential Area. Below, crates in Barkin's room serve as useful wall units. (Staff photos by Rich Newman.)

The television is within easy reac, sometimes almost too tempting but when its time to burn some of that midnight oil I merely have to walk downstairs into the study, otherwise affectionately known as "the pit."

There is even a yard to play in and a porch to sit on and watch the evening sun set over the Berkshires. Life seems very relaxed for the moment.

But those are only the physical aspects of living in a house as opposed to a dorm or apartment. there is a sense of oneness that isn't found in the dorm. Life isn't so transient, in one semester and out the next, a great floor for one semester then an awful one for two.

The simple fact of living in a house dictates a more conscious and sincere effort to found out all about the other residents, whether they be sisters or boarders. You can't simply shut your door to the rest of the house and hide, along with your problems.

Others are counting on you, either to work together on homework or attend a house meeting. A strong sense of responsibility for each other becomes very rewarding.

It is definitely a new experience and a learning experience and I welcome what lies ahead.

Mrs. Kamins, explaining the landlord's perspective of such a situation, said, "We wanted to know who was living in each unit so that no strangers can wander in when the pool is open, thus creating a security problem for the tenants and posing an insurance liability for us." Wentworth said Mrs. Kamins claims are "foolish" because tenants are allowed to bring guests to the pool anyway.

Subletting and termination of the lease are two more areas about which the two sides disagree. Union representatives said a tenant may sublet, keeping the lease in her/his possession. They also argue that if a tenant wants to move, "a landlord may not reasonably withold consent." The Howland lease would prefer "assignment" to subletting, where a tenant turns over the lease to the landlord for the sublettee. This lease would also require as much as a $50 fee to terminate the contract. The union believes that assignment carries no guarantee that an original tenant may return, and disapproves of such a high termination fee.

Some other problems at Colonial Village are landlord restrictions regarding automobile repairs on the premises, selective enforcement of rules and charges of discrimination.

Automobile repair on the property could, by the landlord's claim, disrupt tenants with noise and create fire and parking hazards. Union spokespersons disagree, saying any restriction upon the tenant's use of her/his own belongings "gives the landlord the right to dictate a tenant's lifestyles"

Wentworth alleges that rules at Colonial Village are enforced "selectively." She said that while one tenant may be evicted for not emptying their trash, another tenant doing the same thing may be allowed to stay. This policy, she said, is often used to "get rid of undesirable tenants. Wentworth says tenants rights advocates and minorities are often evicted by these "selective" means.

A more serious charge leveled against Cohn and Kamins Real Estate, involves a policy which discriminates against single parents and Third World tenants. JoAnne Levenson, Director of Off—Campus Housing at UMass, said the discrimination is enforced through economic channels.

"Higher rents are charged to blacks, Hispanics and women with children than to others, thus eliminating them from a chance at quality housing," Levenson said.

Wentworth said this policy is consistent with all the units Kamins manages for Cohn, the 200 apartments at Colonial Village and the 85 at Presidential Apartments, also in Amherst. Kamins manages some 800 units total, including Southwood, and complexes in Belchertown and sunderland.

When asked if Kamins Real Estate or Cohn does practice discrimination against any of its tenants, or prospective tenants, Mrs. Kamins denied the charge. "What is Third World? I've never heard such nonsense in my life. We have many blacks and single parents living in our apartments, and many of them have been very good tenants."

Wentworth told of a conversation she had with Kamins when, reportedly, he said he did not like to rent to undergraduate college women "because they have fathers who are attorneys and cause trouble." Mrs. Kamins denied also this charge. "That just doesn't sound like something Pat (Kamins) would say," she said. In addition to Colonial Village and Presidential, Cohn also has part—ownership in the Northwood Apartments complex in Sunderland, as well as owning apartments in Groton and Windsor Locke, Connecticut. In addition, Cohn is a partner in the KLC Corporation, which owns un—developed land along University Drive. He and his partner also own the Amherst Nursing Home.

Psychiatrist cites valium as addictive

By JANET STAIHAR
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A psychiatrist who has treated celebrities for alcohol and drug abuse told a Senate health subcommittee yesterday that the most widely used drug in America — Valium — is addictive and should not be prescribed for everyday stress.

Dr. Joseph Pursch, head of the Alcohol Rehabilitation Service at the Navy's Long Beach Regional Medical Center in California, said alcoholism and the overuse of tranquilizers represent the nation's No. 1 health problem.

"Classically today, if a woman walks into her doctor's office and says, "I'm nervous, my husband drinks too much,' the doctor will automatically give her a tranquilizer," said the Navy psychiatrist, whose patients have included Billy Carter, the president's brother; Mrs. Betty Ford, the former president's wife; and Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga.

More than 44.6 million Valium prescriptions were filled in 1978. And, Pursch said, many doctors don't realize that patients can get hooked on Valium, Librium and other mild tranquilizers.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, the subcommittee chairman, asked if Valium alone is a problem in society, Pursch replied he has seen people who have become addicted to the tranquilizer in only six weeks.

"None of these drugs (Valium and Librium) solve our problems," said Pursch. "They make people feel better because they make you feel dull and insensitive. But they don't solve anything."

But Robert B. Clark, president of Hoffmann-La Roche Inc., the manufacturers of Valium, maintained it is a safe and effective drug when properly used. He said addiction is "extremely rare" at recommended dosage levels, and added that Valium does not appear to be more addictive than any other miid tranquilizer.

The vast majority of patients on Valium use it for only a short time and follow their doctor's instructions, Clark said, having no problem with the drug.

He added, however, that Roche will begin a new program to make certain information on the risks and benefits of Valium is included in each container for the patient to read.

Paying Pope's visit may be unconstitutional

By JOANNE D'ALCOMO
Associated Press

BOSTON — Protestants, a civil rights group, and a birth control and abortion advocate yesterday raised questions about the constitutional separation of church and state as the city prepared for the Oct. 1 visit of Pope John Paul II.

Two Protestant ministers and the Civil Liberities Union of Massachusetts, testifying during a city council hearing, objected to the use of city money to construct two platforms to be used during the pope's celebration of an outdoor Mass.

Boston is the first stop on the pope's visit to the United States, and the outdoor Mass on the Boston Common, which is expected to attract 500,000 people, will be his first public event in this country.

"Is it appropriate to spend public tax dollars, public tax money for a religious service on the Boston Common?" said Dr. Kenneth Claus, a United Church of Christ minister.

The city council is considering Mayor Kevin H. White's request for $700,000 to pay for expenses related to the pope's visit. Part of that money is to be used to construct two huge platforms for the altar and for a 300-member music group that will participate in the Mass.

Claus said he supported money for "security," but he was disturbed about spending public money for the platforms that will be part of the Mass.

"This is not a public event," he said, noting that under Roman Catholic law, non-Catholics cannot receeive communion during Mass.

"He (the pope) is a head of state and he deserves security and all of the dignity that is afforded a head of state. My problem simply goes to public support of religious services."

"It's a toughie, it's a close call," said Lawrence DiCara, a member of the council, which is dominated by Roman Catholics.

Sox down Birds, 3-2; Yaz still one hit away

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press

BOSTON — Right-hander Bob Stanley pitched eight innings of four-hit ball for his 15th victory and Jim Rice had two runs batted in as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Baltimore Orioles 3-2 last night.

The Orioles' Dennis Martinez, 15-13, thwarted Carl Yastrzemski's bid for hit No. 3,000. Yastrzemski, with 2,999 hits, went hitless in four at-bats, grounding out three times and striking out swinging.

Fred Lynn doubled home a first-inning run and Rice followed with a sacrifice fly which scored Rick Burleson. In the third, Rice tripled in Lynn, who had doubled.

Stanley, 15-9, allowed only singles as the Orioles scored both their runs on double-play grounders in the fourth and fifth innings. He left after issuing a leadoff walk to Terry Crowley in the ninth, with Dick Drago finished up.

The loss snapped Baltimore's seven-game winning streak and gave Boston only its sixth victory in its last 22 games.

Stanley won his fourth game without a defeat in his last five starts and was aided by his sinker ball, which led to four double-play grounders.

Martinez allowed eight hits, including two doubles by Lynn and Rice's triple, but he disappointed a Fenway Park crowd of 30,618 by retiring Yastrzemski with breaking balls.

The Boston slugger took hard swings at several pitches that may have been out of the strike zone in an attempt to get hit number 3,000 with a large contingent of his family — including his father, Carl Yastrzemski — looking on.

Clayborn makes amends

FOXBORO (AP) — Cornerback Raymond Clayborn apologized yesterday for a locker room incident in which he allegedly poked his finger in the eye of a Boston Globe sports writer.

Will McDonough, a sports columnist for the Boston Globe, and Clayborn exchanged words in the Patriots locker room Sunday following the Patriots' 56-3 trouncing of the New York Jets.

Witnesses said McDonough hit Clayborn after the thirdyear defenseman from Texas poked the writer.

McDonough received a clean bill of health Monday from an opthamolgist who checked the writer for a scratched eye suffered in the incident.

"I'd like to make an apology to Will for the incident that occurred in the dressing room after the game last Sunday and also to you guys for being belligerent in not giving you interviews," Clayborn told writers at the Patriots' daily press briefing.

"I do not plan on letting anything like what happened in the dressing room yesterday occur again," he said.

McDonough was not immediately available for comment on the apology.

Clayborn made his apology following a meeting with Patriots Coach Ron Erhardt. The 6- foot-1, 190 pound back said he had been unwilling to grant interviews this season because of what he thought were derogatory stories last season.

Clayborn reportedly had a fist fight recently with teammate Don Westbrook, a reserve wide receiver, and has had several verbal run-ins with some reporters.

Erhardt said he went "man to man" with Clayborn following the incident. He said no other action was planned in the incident.

McDonough was not at the press briefing, and Clayborn said he would repeat the apology the next time the two met.

Indiana coach sentenced to six month prison term

By L. RUBEN SANCHEZ
Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Controversial basketball Coach Bobby Knight, back home in Indiana, had his sixmonth sentence reaffirmed Monday after he refused to appeal his conviction of assault against a Puerto Rican police officer during the Pan American Games in July.

The Indiana University coach, who said in a news conference Sunday at Bloomington, Ind., that he has no intention of returning to Puerto Rico, formally was sentenced by District Judge Rurico Rivera. Knight also was ordered to pay a $500 fine, the maximum for a misdemeanor charge. Both the sentence and fine originally were announced when Knight was found guilty in absentia last Aug. 22.

The judge immediately issued an arrest order. It was not expected, however, that Puerto Rico, a U.S. Commonwealth, would attempt to extradite Knight to where he coached the U.S. basketball team to a gold medal in the Pan American Games.

Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo said after Knight was found guilty that he would not consider extradition for a misdemeanor charge. Indiana's Gov. Otis R. Bowen also said he "would not be willing to allow Bobby Knight to be extradited."

Knight was unavailable for comment after Monday's court action.

When the sentence was handed down last month by Rivera, he gave Knight two weeks to show up in court to file an appeal. The judge ordered the sentence imposed Monday since Knight failed to come to court.

The incident leading to Knight's conviction on a charge of aggravated assault occurred during a practice session at the Pan Am Games. A women's basketball team from Brazil arrived eight minutes early at the gym where the U.S. men's team was winding up a practice. Knight asked that the Brazilians be asked to leave until his team completed its drills. Then the controversy started.

The police officer, Jose Silva, said Knight slugged him, claimed that Knight used abusive language and that the coach resisted arrest.

Knight, at a news conference Sunday, repeated basically what he had said earlier in San Juan, that he brushed Silva's face with his fingers in a reflex action.

"I thought he (Silva) was going to hit me," Knight said.

Knight acknowledged at the news conference that he said in San Juan that the "Puerto Rican team was a heck of a lot easier to beat than their court system. That infuriated a lot of people, but I was not trying to infuriate anybody.

"Then, when the silver medal was presented, I said, 'I'll clap for that; they should get second place. They've been a secondclass operation all week.' What I said I meant with some degree of humor. But for the most part it was not accepted this way."

The line score tells it all

Austin and McEnroe take over

By CHRISTY BARBEE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — They are so young and so good. You'd think, though, that there would be some sort of youthful uncertainty, some remnant of adolescent self doubt.

But then 16-year-old Tracy Austin and 20-year-old John McEnroe are the champions of one of the two most prestigious tennis tournaments in the world — the U.S. Open. And they didn't get that way by being usual.

You ask Austin if she now has claim to No. 1, and she replies carefully: "That's reaching a little bit. It's very close, though. I might be No. 2. It might be Martina, me, then Chrissie."

What?

Yes, after beating fourtime titlist Chris Evert Lloyd in the final, Austin has some basis for asserting supremacy. Lloyd for the first year in her career has not won a major championship. Austin's 6-4, 6-3 victory Sunday was her third over the 24-yearold Lloyd, who for years ruled tennis the way Austin probably will. Martina Navratilova won Wimbledon for a second year, but Austin beat her in the semifinals here.

She now is the youngest person to win the open.

And McEnroe, of course, wasn't feigning modesty.

"I consider myself on a given day the best," he said after beating fellow New Yorker Vitas Gerulaitis 7-5, 6-3, 6-3 for the men's title. "But I think Borg is the best player in the world for the year.

ECAC set to expel UMass from league

By STEVE ZACK
and JIM DEGNIM
Collegian Staff

Due to a conflict between the basketball television packages of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference and the Eastern Athletic Association, UMass, which is a member of both, will be voted out of the ECAC on Sept. 26, UMass baseball coach Dick Bergquist said Monday.

Expulsion from the ECAC would make it "virtually impossible" for the UMass baseball team to be selected for postseason play, Bergquist said. Men's track, swimming tennis, and soccer would be ineligible for ECAC playoffs. Women's teams would not be affected, since they belong to the Associaton of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women.

The action to be taken against UMass by the ECAC comes as a result of a television contract signed by the school's basketball team in conjunction with the EAA, DDB Associates, and the Hughes Television Network. The games scheduled to be televised by the Eaa run opposite of the Saturday afternoon telecasts of the ECAC.

In the ECAC's articles of membership, it is forbidden to televise an athletic contest opposite an ECAC telecast. Each violation of this rule is punishable by a $50,000 fine assessed by NBC (producers of the ECAC games) to the ECAC. The ECAC warned the EAA teams it would pass on any fines to violating teams.

In August, members of the UMass athletic department, including athletic Director Frank McInerny, assistant athletic Director Bob O'Connell, faculty representative George Richason, baseball coach Berquist, and track coach Ken O'Brien attended a hearing with the ECAC, informing the athletic council that they felt if punishment was due, it should be restricted to the sport that committed the penalty.

"We asked that if there is a penalty on basketball, it be restricted to basketball and not affect the others," Berquist said.

But the ECAC stuck to its original plan, and on recommendation by the Infractions Committee (which reviews violations) and the Executive Council to the general membership, requested that UMass, along with other EAA schools in violation of ECAC membership laws, be expelled from the league.

Other EAA schools facing action by the league are Rutgers University in New Jersey, George Washington University, Duquesne University and St. Bonaventure. Members of the EAA unaffected by the ruling are Penn State (withdrew from the EAA), Villanova (pulled out of the television pact), West Virginia (withdrew from the ECAC), and Pittsburgh (not an ECAC member).

In defense of UMass' position, McInerny commented, "We're doing it (the TV contract) to get things for the University that the ECAC can't get."

Dr. Leland Byrd, executive director of the EAA, said, "We have entered into a contract with DDB Associates and the Hughes Television Network to produce our game of the week because we feel it gives our member schools identity and exposure that we need."

Byrd indicated that the large number of schools in the ECAC minimizes the exposure for individual schools.

"Being one of 67 schools is not like being one of eight," he said.

ECAC officials were unavailable to comment on the conflict.

It is expected that DDB Associates and the Hughes Television Network will make a public statement sometime today.

gripes probed in state inquiry

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Security deposit problems in the Amherst area are considered serious and widespread according to state and campus officials investigating the situation.

A spokesman for state Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti confirmed this week the office is investigating the Amherst are based on information given them by the UMass Legal Services office.

The attorney general's office joins LSO and the Massachusetts Public Interest research group in the investigation of recent student complaints against landlords' concerning the security deposits.

Steve Baumohl, LSO attorney said a security deposit task force has been established along with Steve Dreesen of MassPIRG, AND Joanne Levinson of the UMass off-campus housing office. Baumohl will document the practices of local apartment complexes concerning security deposit deductions and turn the information over to the attorney general's office.

The task force is currently compiling complaints from students against former landlords who have overcharged for damages or for cleaning the apartments.

"Students are prime prey for unscrupulous landlords," said Dreesen, adding that students who move out of state after vacating apartments are particularly vulnerable. Dreesen said that such students are in a situation which makes it difficult to dispute charges and that many landlords, aware of this, take advantage of the situation.

Examples of the alleged overcharges offered by Baumohl include such charges as $25 for carpet, stove, or refrigerator cleaning. According to the state law covering security deposit procedures, a landlord may deduct a "reasonable amount" to repair damage caused by tenants with "reasonable wear and tear excluded," and that an itemized list of damages, including written evidence of actual or estimated repair costs, be sent to the tenant within 30 days of termination of the lease.

The law also states that the security deposit required by a landlord may not exceed one month's rent and that the money must be deposited in an interest-paying account in a Massachusetts bank, with the name and address of the bank, the deposit receipt and the account number turned over to the tenant.

At the end of each year the interest on the account should either be paid to the tenant or applied to the next month's rent, at the tenant's option. Although neither Baumohl or Dreesen said this was a problem in the Amherst area, the law states that landlords who violate these requirements must return the security deposit to the tenant.

The task force is planning to survey students to determine the extent of the problem, Baumohl said, and he urged anyone with information regarding security deposit problems to contact the Legal Services Office in the Campus Center.

'Obscene' library stirs frustration

Students questioned yestered by the Collegian about the closing of the UMass library reacted with frustration, apathy and anger.

Book move to cost double what was expected. Page 3.

Joan Hawkinson, a third-year graduate student, called the closing of the library "obscene" and said students should get a rebate for the loss of the library services.

Senior Doug Brown, a resource economics major, was "pretty disgusted" and said, "Something should have been said before professors made up their reading lists."

"We've been screwed," said Martha Wintheiser, also a resource economics major. She said the shutdown was a convenient way of calling attention to the need for more library funds.

Sophomore Gayle Finkelstein said, "The library closing affects everyone on campus (not just students)." Like other students, Finkelstein said she saw the library shutdown as only one of many problems threatening the University. "People are making a big joke out of it even though it's a serious problem."

Oil may lie off three coasts

BUCHAREST, Romania [AP] - Oil to sustain the world's energy-hungry industrial nations may lie in promising fields beneath the waters off the coasts of Canada, Spain and Venezuela, experts said yesterday.

In one of several papers presented to a seminar of the 10th World Petroleum Congress, Canadian oil economist Neil McMillan estimated Canada's Labrador Sea alone will yield 18 billion barrels of oil, twice the estimated size of Alaska's Prudhoe Bay reserve, and four trillion cubic meters of natural gas.

Spain's delegation said four commercial oil fields had been discovered since 1970 off the Ebro delta on the Mediterranean coast, and that larger finds were expected.

Venezuelan oil official, Frederico Russomanno, said his nation was believed to have some 26 billion barrels of gas and oil which could be recovered by conventional means.

BU contract approval urged

BOSTON [AP] — Union negotiators recommended approval of a contract agreement yesterday between Boston Univeristy and striking clerical and technical workers, the university said.

The bargaining team of Local 655 Distributive Workers of America, met with the membership in BU's Marsh Chapel after the end of a five-hour bargaining sesson, said Steve Wagner, a university spokesman.

'Scoop' assails Cuban arms

WASHINGTON [AP] - The Soviet Union is arming Cuba with weapons systems that could pose "a major threat to our oil supplies," demonstrating a pattern of behavior that is "hostile to the interests of the United States," Sen. Henry ("Scoop) M. Jackson, D-vVash, said yesterday.

Jackson, in a speech on the Senate floor, said the Soviets have given Cuba two submarines, including one that could mine U.S. coastal waters, threatening U.S. oil tankers. The other is a training vessel, Jackson said, leading to the presumption that more attack submarines are anticipated.

Jackson's speech marked the latest escalation in the furor over Cuba, which began with the disclosure that 2,000 to 3,000 Soviet combat troops were based in the Caribbean island nation. In the two weeks since then, the issue has blossomed into a major foreign policy obstacle for the Carter administration.

Strike blocks Boston trains despite restraining order

BOSTON [AP] —About 6,500 commuters switched to cars and buses yesterday as a strike halted all trains in or out of Boston's North Station for the second day.

Pickets from the union representing 546 Boston & Maine sectionmen went to South Station Tuesday to try and stop long distance trains and tie up another 8,000 commuters. But they left when told the building is private property, B&M spokeswoman Gloria Stone said.

South Station, which serves AMTRAK trains to New York and Washington as well as commuter trains to communities south and west of Boston, is owned by the Boston Redevelopment Authority.

The workers went on strike Monday at B&M's North Station and at the company's offices and shops in Billerica.

Traffic at North Station stopped as other railroad unions honored the picket lines. The sectionmen, known in the railroads as gandydancers, repair buildings, bridges and rights-of-way.

U.S. District Court Judge Rya Zobel issued restraining orders Saturday and Monday to halt the wildcat strike by members of the Brotherhood of the Maintenance of the Way, the sectionmen's union.

She scheduled a hearing for Thursday on the B&M's request for an injunction and may determine then whether the union is in contempt of her restraining orders.

Federal marshals went to North Station Tuesday morning to photograph pickets and collect their names, apparently in preparation for the hearing, Ms. Stone said.

Tuesday afternoon, the marshals served notice on the pickets that they might be arrested unless they left, a union official said.

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority said traffic was heavy on rapid transit lines, and a spokesman said the MBTA honored commuter rail passes on buses and subways.

However, the MBTA said it was unable to put on extra buses Tuesday to replace the trains to northern suburbs because the authority does not have enough buses to service its regular routes and private bus companies said they had no equipment to spare.

The B&M operates the commuter service under contract to the MBTA.

Peter Carbone, general chairman of the United Transportation Union representing 800 B&M conductors and trainmen, said he pulled his men off the job because they were afraid they'd get hurt if they kept working.

Supervisory personnel operated eight trains to northern and western suburbs Monday night, but they could handle only about a third of the normal number of the commuters, officials said.

Carbone said the strike started Friday when a nonunion contractor was called in to repair a boiler at the B&M's North Billerica shops, in the wake of layoffs of several union sectionmen.

Seventeen members of the Brotherhood of the Maintenance of the Way were fired over the weekend, and Carbone said those firings were the main reason his men were supporting the walkout.

Books moved today; Straw to pad library

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

University officials contracted the move of about 250,000 books from the main library to the Goodell building yesterday, at a cost of $124,421 while Physical Plant workers installed the first 130 of 1,000 bales of straw at the base of the library.

Roger Sitterly and Son, Inc. of South Deerfield, the moving firm who moved the books from the Goodell Building in 1973 when the main library opened and the only firm to return a bid, will begin moving books today, Anne ANNE wood of the University News Bureau said yesterday.

Prices have just about doubled since the 1973 move, Wood said. News Bureau officials said Monday the university expected to pay about $85,000 for the transfer.

"It's not hay, it's straw," a Physical Plant worker said to students passing by the west side of the main library yesterday afternoon, as he added another of the 130 bales to be stacked.

The bales, which will total 1,000 are first being sprayed with sodium silicate—a fire retardent before being stacked two high in an area measureing 36 by 64 feet. The installation of the bales was recommended as a safety precaution by the Loomis and Loomis consulting firm of Windsor, Conn., Wood said.

The Loomis firm last tuesday reported the hazard of falling bricks from the library.

David Spencer, an architect in the physical plant, last week said the bales would act as a "shock absorber" for any bricks that may fall.

The bales are being placed over a section of the South College tunnel which will be used to transport books by the Sitterly firm beginning today.

"There is about a 60 foot stretch where if some bricks fall down, it might offer a dynamic load," Spencer siad.

The Sitterly firm which has offices in Amherst, Greenfield and Springfield, is contracted to move 9,000 cartons of books, 263 stacks of shelving, furniture, and machinery by September 21.

the contract also calls for the transfer of 6,000 additional cartons and 500 additional stacks of shelving at a later date.

Also included in the contract is a clause which calls for the mover to provide his own insurance, Wood said.

Meanwhile, the Office of residential Life is working with the food Services on plans for alternative studying space on campus.

Office of Residential Life Director Marjorie P. Lenn yesterday said heads of residence will be working with house governments to establish specific studying space and quiet hours in the dormitories.

Lenn said Director of Food Services Arthur Warren is working on a plan to open the dining commons during the evening hours for study, as well.

Grads more dependent on library than others

By LAURA L. SMITH
Collegian Staff

While the library shut down has affected all university students, graduate students will be hit harder than most, Graduate Student Senate President Monte Pearson yesterday said.

According to Pearson, graduate students do the type of research that faculty members do, which often involves obscure documents and microfilm facilities that are only obtainable at the main library. Much of this reference material cannot be checked out of the library.

'Graduate students do research which requires obscure documents and microfilm facilities obtainable only at the main library.'

Although there are other specialized libraries on campus, such as the Morrill Science Library, the main library os the only one that has the material needed by most sociial science majors, Pearson said. He also said other area college libraries are primarily for undergraduates and are "useless to graduate students."

Pearson added that graduate students rely on the carrels in the main library for studying, and inaccessability to thr carrels will pose a great inconvenience. He said GSS members are also upset that the administration has not consulted them on any decision making.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors voiced a similiar complaint last week, charging that the administration's refusal to involve faculty in the decision may violate a union contract clause on working conditions.

Lead by MSP President Jules Chametzky of the UMass English Department, the faculty union is proposing a faculty liason group to work with the administration on any further decisions regarding the library.

In a press release issued last Thursday, the MSP said it felt "deep concern at the secretive way in which the administration decided to close the library, giving faculty, students and staff little or no notice of this fundamental change in their working conditions."

Earlier consultation with faculty would have resulted in more orderly planning, Chametzky said.

The GSS will hold its first meeting of the semester next Tuesday, September 18, at 7:00 p.m. in Campus Center room 903.

Faculty debate continues for passage of 'G' core

DAVID LACHANCE
Collegian Staff

UMass students are continuing work on a proposal which would establish a "G" core requirement for human and social awareness courses, Marea Wexler of the Center for Racial Studies said yesterday.

Wexler said the "G" core requirement was proposed last year in reaction to violence against women and members of the Third World community.

The proposal in its current form would create a university requirement of two "G" core courses, while reducing the requirements for both "C" and "D" cores from three to two.

Wexler, a black, claimed the University is and "ivory tower" that gives students "an unbalanced sense of the world." The University, she asserted should make education relevent by addressing the problems of the real world.

The "G" core would include courses in human oppression, sexual discrimination, handicapped awareness, and business ethics—many of which already exist under different core designations, Wexler said.

Last semester, the Undergraduate Student Senate gave "almost unanimous" approval to the proposal, according to Student Government Association Co-president Rich LaVoice.

One hundred faculty and staff members and heads of residence received a copy of the first draft of the proposal over the summer. Their responses to the proposal, Wexler said, are being used to write a second draft.

The proposal, with Senate approval, would then be delivered to the Faculty Senate, which would in turn deliver its recommendation to the administration or defeat the proposal.

The proposal has a "real problem," according to Faculty Senate Secretary Harvey Kline, " a lot of the faculty will oppose it, not on its merits, but because it would reduce the C's and D's (core requirements) by one course."

The last time core requirements were changed, according to Kline, was when the "F" core was introduced in 1976. The "F" core allows a student to select and interdisciplinary course in place of one "C" or "D" core course. A committee to select courses included under the "F" core is "just about finished," Kline said.

Of the "G" core, Kline said, "A lot of the the faculty will say, 'It's a great idea, let's our present requirements.'" But he said many faculty members were opposed to the "F" core, which only replaces one "C" or "D" core course.

Another problem with the "G" core, according to Kline, is that a student would be able to graduate after taking only one "C" or "D" core course.

LaVoice said he believes that the Student Senate would still approve the "G" core proposal if it were made in addition to, rather than in place of, current university requirements. LaVoice said there would probably be "some negotiation" for the change.

Wexler claimed it will be at least a year before the Faculty Senate discusses the proposal.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Editorial response to the 'dying pages'

Stephen Klein's article which appeared in yesterday's Collegian concerning the Third World pages were marred with misinformation and sweeping assumptions. First of all, he began by stating that there is a "seriuos crisis" in the Third World Community having to do with the Black Affairs pages. Klein did not consult anyone on the Black Affairs staff as to the status of the pages. As a matter of fact, the Acting editor-in-chief, Christopher A. Schmitt was informed last week that the publication of the pages would begin this week.

Klein stated that last year's staff would not return and did not make arrangements for their replacements. Again, without consulting the parties involved he was incorrect because one of the editors did return as did some of the staff members.

Carol Rosenberg's statement about the number of students in the journalism department is untrue, and irrelevant because one does not have to be a journalism major to work at the Collegian. Black Affairs questions the motives of this article. While it appeared to have the guise of expressing genuine interest, we feel that it was an attempt to discredit the staff and the pages.

3rd World Affairs office place for student contacts

The office of Third World Affairs, having developed an entirely new staff for the semester, looks forward to an extremely productive year. We call upon all third world students to prepare themselves for an enriching experience with student organizations as well as a successful academic year.

Student organizations are a concrete mechanism for students to gain practical work experience in the area of their study here at the univeristy. Presently, there are a broad number of Third World student organizations on campus providing experience in radio communications, news journalism, music, theatre, political forums, concerts, sciences and many more areas.

They are called "Third World" to make the determination of non-white students as a cultural, political and ethnic block that has and continues to be traditionally ignored. Third World as a term seeks to identify non-white students as that part of humanity that has taken the largest share of European chauvinism, racism, discrimination and exploitation.

It is not separatist on our part to define ourselves in this context; it is survival. Even now the few gains that our people have secured are being eroded by the indifference and racist enlusionism of a dominant class that traditionally construed us as inferior. Little has really changed for the majority of Third World people in Amherst in particular and America in general.

In order to secure the few gains we have and to attain those still out of our grasp, we must stay perpetually viligent. Our future security and that of those to come depends on our unrelenting commitment to our studies and those organizations that have enhanced those studies.

If you are interested in becoming a member of a student organization watch the Black Affairs or Nummo News editions of the Collegian, listen in to the programs of the Black Mass Communications project or stop in to the Office of Third World Affairs, 308 Student Union Building (545-2517). Experience as well as independent studies credit can be gained. But more importantly the survival of Third World organizations.

Rally tomorrow to protest Rampersad case

The Committee Against Repression will hold a noon Rally at the Courthouse in Northampton tomorrow to protest decisions reached in the Seta Rampersad Case. There will also be a Vigil at 7:30 p.m. at the Captains Table in Northampton in commemoration of Seta's death.

Facts of Case

1. Seta Rampersad, a 20 year old UMass student was found dead in room 240 of Motel 6 in South Deerfield on September 13, 1978, at 1:30 p.m.
2. Subsequently an inquest was held to determine the cause of death. However, given the limited nature of an inquest, where only the judge and district attorney are permitted questions, many areas thought to be important by Ozell Hudson (the Rampersad's attorney), the Rampersad's and the 3rd World Womens Task Force, were left untouched or explored only minimally.
3. In a very unusual move the D.A. came to Motel 6 on the afternoon of September 13. Although his presence is highly irregular, the D.A. maintains that this is just a normal case.
4. The D.A. when questioned in his office by Attorney Hudson intimated that Seta died with "a smile on her face". He failed to relate the various bruises and contusions noted by examiners on Seta's face, that raises the possibility of foul play.
5. Dr. Olsen, the first doctor to examine Seta's body, testified during the inquest to his contention that the cause of death was possible homicide.
6. Dr. Keeley, a Boston based pathologist, performed the autopsy and testified that the cause of death was unknown. The difference between the testimonies has not been explored except for an attempt during the inquest to get Dr. Olsen to change his testimony.
7. No explanation has been pursued or provided for the time discrepencies relating to time of death: Dr. Keeley put the time of death at around 1 p.m. on the 13th. While Dr. Olsen, the first medical examiner to see the body placed the time of death 10-12 hours prior to that, raising the possibility Seta was dead before she got to Motel 6.
8. Dr. Brendler, a neurological surgeon, was called on to testify to the possibility that the symptoms that Seta exhibited prior to her death were indicative of epileptic seizure. He answered in the affirmative but admitted that people don't die from epileptic seizures. Dr. Brendler was asked to comment without hearing from a nurse, Mr. Serafin, who was on the scene allegedly while Seta was still alive.
9. Discrepencies between the testimony of Jimmy the Greek. Brian Pitzer and Carol Newton, as well as Mr. Serafin - the four people present in room 240 before the police arrived - concerning their actions prior to reaching Motel 6 and inside room 240, were not pursued during the inquest.
10. No charges were placed against Pitzer, Newton, or Jimmy the Greek, in spite of their admittance that for 12 hours while Seta was allegedly sick, they made no effort to get medical assistance or to even notify motel employees that there was a sick woman in the room. This possibly constituting negligent homicide.
11. There were no attempts made during the police investigation to run routine chemical tests on materials in the room or for fingerprints.
12. No charges were placed against Pitzer, Newton, or Jimmy the Greek for their self-admitted drug abuse.
13. No charges were placed against Jimmy the Greek for running after-hours parties illegally in the Castaway Lounge.

Four Puerto Rican nationalists freed

CHICAGO AP — Four Puerto Rican nationalists granted clemency be President Carter were freed from federal prisons Monday where they had spent at least a quarter century for terrorist acts in Washington D.C.

Several hours after their release, the four — Irving Flores Rodrigues, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Oscar Collazo and Lolita Lebron — converged on Chicago, where they were to attend a rally to renew demands for independence for their Caribbean homeland.

The three men had planned to hold a news conference after their arrival at O'Hare International Airport, but a crush of reporters made that impractical and they were taken into a small room away from reporters for the reunion with Ms. Lebron.

"I have a great satisfaction. We have succeeded in our struggle for victory. We are stronger than ever," she had said earlier as she emerged a free woman from the federal prison at Alderson, W. Va.

"The fight for freedom is always a long fight and always a hard fight," Collazo told waiting supporters as he stepped from the federal penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kan. "I have nothing to be disappointed about."

Three of the four were convicted in a 1954 shooting in the U.S. House of Representatives that left five congressmen wounded. The fourth, Collazo, 65, was jailed four years earlier for attempting to assassinate then-President Truman.

The four were granted clemency last week by Carter in what he described as a humanitarian gesture.

Released after serving time for the House shootings were Ms. Lebron, 59, Irving Flores Rodriguez, 54, and Rafael Cancel Miranda, 49.

Flores had been held in Springfield, Mo., and Cancel in Marion, Ill.

Ms. Lebron, sentenced to serve 56 years, spoke to a crowd outside the prison, saying she did not regret her prison experience and would continue fighting for Puerto Rican liberation.

On Nov. I, 1950, Collazo was 36 when he and Griselio Torresola opened fire on Blair House in Washington, where Truman was staying while the White House was being renovated. Truman was not injured, but Collazo's companion and a White House policeman were killed.

Sentenced to death for the Blair House incident, Collazo's term was commuted to life in prison by Truman in 1954.

Ms. Lebron was 34 and the oldest of the four Puerto Ricans who opened fire from the House visitor's gallery. Cancel, then 23, emptied an eight-shot revolver while shooting at House members before being subdued.

Flores refused during his companions on the House shootings and claimed he had no intentions of killing anyone, although he fired at least three shots. Asked why he did not use blanks, Flores said, "because when the United States went into Puerto Rico they did not use blanks."

Course Offerings

SW190V - Myth of the Disadvantaged

The goal of this course is to bring into focus the social engineering involved in labels such as "disadvantaged", "culturally deprived", and so on. This is accomplished by confronting hard, cold data with a fresh analysis to bear upon a large body of information that does not avoid the immense role that racism and imperialism have played in our language and in our lives. Serious students are invited and are expected to fulfill the following requirements: a midterm exam, an oral presentation based on individual or team study contrasting how people are defined and how the people define themselves, and a final project.

Wed 4:00-6:30 Malcolm X Center

SW191E - Race, Biology and Society

This course is a thoughtful excursion through the myths and realities of racial variation. Primary emphasis will be placed on biological variation including theories linking behavior and intelligence to genes, eg., race. SW190A - Afro-American Art - 1900's to the Present: Historical Development and Contemporary Practice

This course is designed to make the student aware of the various contributions of the Afro-American artist as well as creating original pieces of work. We will approach the subject with a historical look at who the artists were and from what climate their creativity emerged. The course is aimed towards students who are interested in a close look at the development of art in America and how Blacks have contributed qualitatively and quantitatively to the American art scene. A field trip will be arranged at the end of the sememster, so that students will be able to see examples of Afro-American art in this area. As a class project, students will be asked to create an original piece of work in a contemporary style discussed in class with the assistance of the instructor. No previous art background is required.

"Aren't we paying for the library?" asked junior Tim Doherty, a resident assistant on the eighteenth floor of Washington dormitory in Southwest. Doherty said many students on his floor are asking questions about the library but he has "no answers."

Senior Kevin Flanagan said he used the library "every day last year" and called the shutdown a "big inconvenience."

Nancy Fulton said, "Its too early in the semester to judge. Give it a couple more weeks. Then we'll hear people screaming." She conceded she could get reading materials elsewhere, " but it's just so inconvenient."

Brian Fitzpatrick, a continuing education music major, said, "I can't see a university functioning without a library."

Cathy Rooney, a junior economics major and a member of the Campus Center Board of Governors, said she didn't like the building in the first place. "I didn't feel that it was safe. I figured that if you got caught on the upper floors in a fire you'd be gone."

Rooney said she believes the library situation is indicative of "the typical way the University operates" with respect to building contracts and quality. She said she had heard the garage , the Graduate Research Center, the Southwest dorm complex, the Fine Arts Center and the Campus Center all have major structural problems as well.

Chemistry major Rich Judkins said he had been in the library twice in three years. "It doesn't matter to me," he said. But his reaction was not typical of the majority of students polled.

Most students said they thought the closing would definitely affect their education, since other libraries are simply not as convenient, large or well-stocked with materials.

Thatcher: Maiden or Maniac?

By MONICA McKENNA and DAVID STAMPER
Collegian Staff

Dateline-September 1979. Setting: A dark fall evening in London where a choking fog descends thick and heavy over Westminster. That dominion, that Pantheon, the very heart of British politics, seems at risk as the Thames, main artery which feeds its inner soul, flows sluggishly on. Heard through the muffled silence is the ominous click of stilleto against stone.

Begrudgingly, the mist parts to reveal a shaft of moonlight; the glint of an axe edge, a glance of peroxide, and a string of pearls are momentarily caught in the uncanny light. The axe falls, a stifled cry and blood splatters against the polyester two-piece.

Yet another victim is felled by the Mad Axe Woman, the Lizzy Borden of present day London.

Is this the real Margaret Thatcher, Prime Minister of Britain? The Mad Axe woman, hell-bent on a policy of public expenditure cuts. Her victims to date, education, deprived regions, and health and social services. A current poster in major cities supports this view, showing her as a maniacal figure where axes replace hands.

It is an extreme representation of a character who is still remembered by some as "Snatcher Thatcher" for her earlier decision to end the long established policy of free school milk for children.

Is Margaret Thatcher, first woman prime minister in the Western world, a political maniac, or a champion of women's rights and equality? Certainly she is the most controversial figure in British Politics since World War II.

Born daughter of a Greengrocer, later a major at Cambridge, the Junior Minister of Education and the elected leader of the Conservative Party in 1978, she resoundingly defeated the Labour Government in March 1979.

Clad in the traditional middle-aged, middle-class two piece suit (though the ostentatious hats so beloved of cartoonists the world over have gone), she in no way fits into the typical feminist stereotype. Sadly for the cause of women's rights, her actions and her ideals are as conformist as her image. Though the world labels her the "Iron Maiden of Europe," at home she perfers to be seen as "Maggie Super-Mum."

Shadowed by husband Denis wherever she goes, this champion of the family gathered-in her offspring from as far afield as Australia for the spring election. Her housewifely duties are frequently recorded by the press. The British public has seen her wallpapering, pricing cheap cuts of meat during election walkabouts, hoarding tinned foods during an expected shortage, and giving useful tips on baking.

Editorial/Opinion

On execution and prisons:

The death penalty illegal and immoral

When Ed King, out illustrious chief of state, signed the death penalty into law last month, he affixed his place in Massachusetts' history as the hard-on-crime "new Nixon of 1979."

But more importantly, he signed into law a statute which has already been declared unlawful by the state's Supreme Court on December 22, 1975.

Jim Moran

Imposition of the death penalty has been a sensitive issue in the state of Massachusetts for quite some time. This condition is understandable, in light of the execution in this state of Bartolomeo Vanzetti and Nicola Sacco more than 50 years ago.

In a universal discussion of capital punishment, the Sacco-Vanzetti case is relevant because it lends to some supporting facts.

Sacco and Vanzetti were both immigrants, both poor. Sacco was a fish peddler.

Of the 3,860 persons executed in this country between 1930 and 1977, 55 percent were non-white, 40 percent never completed high school and 14 percent completed a formal education no higher than the seventh grade.

If equal justice under the law be a premise, then our 14th Amendment was most surely violated.

The Supreme Court ruled in the 1972 case of Furman vs. Georgia that the death penalty, as practiced in this nation, constituted "cruel and unusual punishment" under the principles of the Eight Amendment. The rationale behind this decision was that capital punishment carried with it no consideration for classification of crimes and aggravating and mitigating circumstances—that people tried and convicted often had no chance of obtaining an "equal crack" at justice.

OK then, putting this aside, let's talk about whether capital punishment is a "deterrent" to the commission of murder. Several states have, since the Furman decision, updated their classification as to what constitutes a "capital" offense, be it first degree murder, rape, manslaughter or whatever.

Mandatory sentences, consistent with the commission of crimes and their nature, are carried out in several states.

But does the homicide rate go down with the existence of capital punishment?

Thorstein Sellin, of the American Law Institute, conducted a study in 1959 to find out whether, in fact, the existence of a death penalty in some states versus the non-existence of a death penalty in other states, had any effect on the homicide rate. His conclusions, based on control variables putting states with similar socio-economic conditions and populations up against others, showed that it was "impossible to distinguish the state which abolished capital punishment from the others."

His inevitable conclusion was that "executions have no discernable effect on homicide death rates."

This argument being removed, what we are then left with is a basic question of cause and effect, related to whether we, as a civilized society, wish to show compassion.

Should we try to prevent crime, and by finding out what causes a person to kill, then try and help them?

Indications are that most murders committed are those called crimes of passion, and are not likely to be repeated. And for the "real" hardcore criminals or psychopaths, should we not either try to help them or put them in a place where they cannot harm others? One certainly couldn't advocate putting a Charles Manson out on the streets. But like our other social commitments, we pay taxes for a service. One such service is a prison system, flawed as it is.

And for the many who would be tried unjustly, thrown in prison for lack of the proper defense, for the innocent man or woman found guilty of a capital offense and executed, what sort of compensation can be made to them?

For them I offer these words by Henry David Thoreau, written in 1849: "Under a government which imprisons any unjustly, the true place for a just man is also in prison."

Jim Moran is a Collegian guest columnist.

An old lady being mugged right now

While you are reading this and drinking a cup of coffee, an old lady is being robbed, beaten, raped and murdered in New York City.

She was walking home from the market, where she had bought a quart of milk, a loaf of bread and two cans of cat food, when the man saw her.

Usually, she took a cab but the dollars had been tight of late. So she was walking down the street in what used to be called a nice neighborhood, humming a tune from the past.

Jack Gallagher

But the man, being an old hat at this, waited for her to open the door to her apartment--instead of jumping at her on the sidewalk as a desperate person might.

She began to ascend the stairs, creaking slowly; he caught the door before it latched hooked.

There she was, penniless and abused; he had $4.45.

But the police will get him: if not this time, then the next.*

And they will take him to the precinct, where he will be read his rights--the rights of every citizen. They will take his fingerprints, give him one phone call and book him.

He will then sit in jail, eating the state's food without expression while he waits for his lawyer.

A day later, or maybe two, his lawyer will show up with a briefcase--and a fee which the state will pay for because the man who attacked the old lady that afternoon has no money. Then the lawyer and client will talk every few days, for a few weeks.

During this time the alleged thief-rapist-murderer will be arraigned on charges of unarmed robbery, rape and first-degree murder. The trial date will be determined at that time too.

Then, after an arbitrary period of days and months, the suspect will go on trial. But the evidence will be somewhat sketchy, so the defense will agree to conviction on lesser counts: third-degree murder and unarmed robbery.

The possibility of rape will be discounted and the convicted man will be sentenced to a maximum security prison at the expense of the state.

Meantime, old ladies will be walking on sidewalks.

They would hope he didn't get paroled--if they knew about him.

They would hope he were dead.

Jack Gallagher is the assistant executive editor.

Letters

Death penalty no deterrent

To the Editor:

The death penalty is now in the process of being legalized in our state. Is there not something very strange in the idea that respect for life and a curb on murder and violence can be brought about by the barbarity of the electric chair?

Do most of us truly want this resumption of state violence? Have we considered the basic question: which of us does deserve to live, or to die, before our time? Those who deliberately and brutally murder innocent victims for no acceptable reason? But who can be trusted ultimately to judge acceptability? Who has the wisdom to draw the lines?

What about those persons who deliberately plan and design and manufacture, and keep ready for instantaneous use, nuclear weapons with which to kill not one or a dozen innocent victims but countless millions - both instantly and by the most brutal and lingering torture, as still demonstrated in the victims of Hiroshima? Do defense planners and workers deserve to die?

What about those who deliberately continue to pour deadly radioactive waste from our power plants into the environment, knowing that no safe method of disposal has been developed? Do plant operators and workers deserve to die?

Obviously we don't advocate executing the people engaged in these lethal activities, no matter how much safer we'd feel with a drastically reduce MAD (Mutually Assured Destruction) deterrent and with zero nuclear power plants!

The idea is absurd, of course, but no more so than what is more and more being perceived as "the insanity of the arms race" whose winners can only be death and destruction on a scale we cannot even imagine. Yet our country has just signed away $33 billion for the MX missile system, a further preparation toward a first strike posture which moves us all closer to annihilation. Do we "deserve" to die? Or is our "reason" acceptable? Or shall we plead insanity?

Who shall draw the lines?

Van Morrison billing a 'disastrous' choice

To the Editor:

In the tradition of last spring's Grateful Dead fiasco, the Union Program Council has made another disastrous choice in booking Van Morrison.

Anyone who has carefully followed the career of Morrison knows that his music has deteriorated since he split from the Doors in 1971.

Furthermore, the Council has once again demonstrated a marked insensitivity to the minorities on this campus by failing to represent such groups as the Fourth World Alliance, Aliens From Uranus (AFU), the Transsexual League, and the Three-Toed Sloths (AIS).

I for one plan to protest this event by ripping up my ticket and throwing the shreds at our once proud library.

At a time when UMass is in dire need of a Jefferson Starship, a Wings, or even the Cars, the best the Council can come up with is a Van.

Don Schneier

(Ed. Note: Jim Morrison, not Van Morrison played with the Doors. It should be brought to the readers attention he died in 1971.)

Library provokes attacks on UMass

To the Editor:

Reactions to the library crisis demonstrate that the University of Massachusetts is not a community of scholars but a jungle full of self-seeking, power hungry interest groups.

In a genuine community the citizens respond to a disaster by temporarily forgetting their normal jealousies and disagreements and pitching in to work their way out of the crisis together.

Only looters, politicians and some professional relief agencies try to use the disaster to promote their own interests.

Here the faculty union, the self-styled graduate student union, the president of the Undergraduate Student Senate and a random assortment of faculty members and students have used our common problem as another occasion for attacking the administration. Not one of them said, "This crisis affects us all - what can we do to help the Chancellor and the Director of Libraries?"

We should be thankful that we have a new Chancellor who shows that he will act promptly and decisively when any part of the community is threatened.

If he had not acted and someone had been killed by a falling brick, I wonder if a lynch mob would have been formed.

The spirit of the mob seems to pervade this so-called community of scholars.

Northampton artists commissioned to paint 'women at work' mural

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The history of women in Northampton will no longer be invisible.

Eight professional artists from the area have received a $10,000 grant from the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy for the research of a mural on Northampton women's history, to be completed next fall.

The mural, which will focus on women at work, will be the first representation of women's history in a given geographical area.

The art colelctive, Hestia, named after the non-violent goddess of the heart, began researching the history of women in Northampton in June. The mural will apear on Main Street, visible from downtown Northampton.

The motivation for the painting stems from the feelings of area artists who have worked on murals in the past and wanted a more public art form.

The grant pays for half of the research, painting, supplies and the salaries of the artists. Hestia members must match the funds, and will hold various fundraising activities and make presentations to industries and educational institutions to raise the necessary $10,000.

While conducting the research with the aid of four Five-colleges humanists, Hestia member Janet Winston said, "It was difficult to find written history of women. Up until the 20th century Northampton women's history was not documented."

The history of women from the 16th century to the present has been researched by Hestia women. The research spans native American History, the Nogutuk Indians in Northampton, the colonial period and the industrial revolution when silk factories employing mostly women sprung up in Northampton.

The mural will portray women at work both inside and outside of the home, in the fields, and in factories. The painting will reflect the dress, tools and architecture of the period. Also included will be portraits of such famous Northampton women as Sojourner Truth, a black slave who was instrumental in freeing slaves once she came North.

The humanists involved in the project will be presenting five free panal discussions. The first to be held this December, will focus on public art. The other four scheduled for next fall, will speak on the invisibility of women in history, the history of women at work, and sexual stereotyping in the schools.

In addition to the mural, Hestia members plan to publish a brochure explaining why they have chosen to paint the mural, along with a brief discription of women's history in Northampton.

The research has entailed an investigation into the Clark School for the Deaf, Smith College, and the Anne Burnham School for Girls, as well as conversations with elder Northampton residents.

"It is important to understand the common people, as well as the famous people from Northampton's past," Winston noted.

Science program at Smith

"Women in Science," a program organized by two Smith College students, will open Sept. 26 at 7:30 p.m., at Smith College's Seelye Hall, with a lecture by Diana Long Hall, professor of history and biology at Boston University. The topic of the lecture will be "History of Women in Science," according to Smith News Director Ann Shanahan.

Leslie Meyer and Kathy Pearlstine, both seniors at Smith majoring in molecular genetics and physical chemistry respectively, spent the summer planning a year-long program focusing on the various lives and careers of women in science.

According to Shanahan, the program will include: Lectures on the social impact of women in science and colloquia presentations by women scientists about their own research and personal experiences; an assertiveness training workshop; a vocational counseling series; and the establishment of a resource center in Smith's Clark Science Center.

Recognizing a high drop-out rate among women majoring in science, Shanahan said, Meyer and Pearlstine organized a series of events exploring the obstacles confronting women who pursue scientific careers, and discussing the kinds of research being done by women.

"Sceintific research has traditionally been a very male-dominated field," Meyer said.

Other lecturers and topics throughout the semester will include: Vera Kistiakowsky, Laboratory of Nuclear Science, M.I.T., "The Current Status of Women in the Sciences;" Lilli Hornig, Wellesley Center for Higher Education Research, "Obstacles to Women: Scientific Sexism;" and Anna Harrison, Department of Chemistry, Mount Holyoke College, "Enhancing the Participation of Women in Science: Individual Motivation."

Second sememster lecture topics have not been determined. All lectures are open to the public. For more information call the Clark Science Center at Smith.

Evening of poetry at FAC

QUATRO, an evening of poetry and music, will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Arts Council, 8 p.m., Sept. 14, in Bezanson Recital Hall at the Fine Arts Center.

The performers are the classical guitarist David Leisner, and the poets Margaret Robison, Henry Lyman, and Francis Quinn. Margaret Robison and Henry Lyman will be reading from their own work. Francis Quinn will be reading the poetry of Robert Francis, who will be unable to perform because of illness.

Robert Francis is the author of seven volumes of poetry and several books of prose. His Collected Poems were published by the University of Massachusetts Press in 1976. Margaret Robison's poetry collection The Naked Bear was published in 1977 by Panache Books and Lynx House Press. Henry Lyman, host and producer of WFCR's "Poems to a Listener", has published two books of translations and a sequence of original poems entitled Noon. David Leisner, winner of the 2nd prize in the 1975 International Guitar Competition in Toronto, has taught at Amherst College and Wesleyan University and performs in Canada, Europe and the United States.

Admission for the general public is $2.

While always ready to exhibit her home economicss Mrs. Thatcher is more reticent when questioned on public policies. Prior to the election, it was she sho refused to take part in all party-leader debates on national television. She has her own personal blacklis of undesirable journalists who are rarely granted an interview. One of her favorites is the host of an afternoon radio program popular among housewives who gave her a lot of favorable air coverage before the election.

Mrs. Thatcher is perhaps selective about her media appearances because initially she was ridiculed nationally for her authoratarian tone and high-pitched voice. The party election campaign, masterfully managed by one of the largest and most expensive publicity agencies in London, involved her in voice and breathing lessons to soften her TV image.

Northern Ireland, Britain's major political embarassment, was the most recent setting for Mrs. Thatcher's own particular brand of publicity which, while exploiting popular sympathies, does little to expound positive policies. The day after Lord Mountbatten's murder, Maggie adopted her maternal image and was filmed signing the plaster casts of young soldiers injured in the conflicts.

Gays mobilize for legal rights, social approval

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

With the defeat of the gay rights legislation in the last session of the Massachusetts legislature, plans are underway for resubmission of the bills which would prohibit discrimination on the basis of "affectional" preference.

Last year, three bills were filed, one of which would have prohibited discrimination in public employment; another which would have prohibited discrimination in such areas of the private sector as housing, credit and private employment; and another which whould have removed the laws which prohibit sex in any form outside marriage. The laws have been in effect since the first settlers arrived in Massachusetts.

The public jobs bill came very close to passage —10 votes short of acceptance—in the last session of the legislature. The private sector bill managed to make it through preliminary committee reports and came closer to passage than in previous years.

Elsewhere, gay rights groups across the country are organizing for the October 14 "March on Washington," in which gays and lesbians will demonstrate to symbolize their solidarity in obtaining legal rights and further social acceptance.

Locally, the UMass People's Gay Alliance and Lesbian Union are finalizing arrangements for fundraising and transportation. The kickoff for the Washington rally will be a disco the night preceeding the trip. Additional organizing plans to gain support around campus are also underway.

People's Gay Alliance President Kevin George announced the plans for involvement in the national effort at a meeting last Thursday. George called for and "outreach" program to involve concerned gays in the community who may want to attend but are not enrolled at the University.

Also discussed were election of officers and a fundraising campaign, which would raise money to pay the legal fees for the civil and criminal suit filed by two UMass men. The two men charge they were physically and verbally harassed when they attempted to dance together at the Quonset Disco in Hadley last spring.

Correction

An article in yesterday's Collegian regarding the Seta Rampersad rally was incorrect. The rally is being sponsored by the Committee Against Repression and the Third World Women's Task Force, not the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy as was reported.

UM volleyball squads set to host spikers from Warsaw

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The NOPE basketball courts once again came alive with final practice rounds, as both the UMass men's and women's volleyball teams prepare to meet the Warsaw Volleyball Club tonight at 7 p.m. in the same gym.

About twenty women and twelve men honed in on special skills designed to compensate for the lack of time and height on both squads. Drills for improving blocking, digging, setting in the front court, and spiking were especially emphasized.

Earlier, on Saturday, a dozen members of the women's team traveled to Westfield State to play Providence College and Springfield College. According to team-member Chris Perron, the scrimmages "helped the team gain good learning experience for the dozen or so that went." Women's team coach Elaine Marasco said "that the score doesn't matter; we were there to learn and to improve skills in the way no practice could ever improve." Of the match Wednesday night, Marasco agreed with the team members, saying, "We're as ready as we'll ever be. All of us are psyched to play Warsaw, which is an excellent team."

Coached by former treasurer Al Morel, the men's team will play immediately after the women's match. Usually playing in the early spring, Morel had a week's notice to assemble players and prepare for a team regarded as one of the best in Europe.

"It's hard practicing this early in the year," said Morel, "usually, we have sessions for toning up the body, basic skills, and individual play. Team play doesn't come until later in the year. This team is going to try, however; the Warsaw team is the best team we have faced yet. We'll do our best."

The Warsaw Academy match was scheduled for Tuesday, September 11, but was pushed ahead a day so that the traveling team, coming in from Pittsburgh yesterday, could practice and rest.

In order to practice, the NOPE courts have been closed for the past two days (Tuesday and Wednesday). They will be reopened Thursday.

After the Warsaw Academy match, the UMass women will travel to Kingston, Rhode Island, for the URI Tournament on Saturday. The men's team will hold tryouts for the season, which starts in early 1980.

Golfwomen open

Six veterans and four newcomers will lead the women's golf team against Rutgers and Mt. Holyoke Friday afternoon in the first match of the fall season. Coach Jane McGahan is looking at the away match as "a chance to see how we score early in the season."

McGahan expects junior Jane McCarthy to lead the group of returning players. McCarthy was the top swinger on last year's team, which finished with the best record among the New England states. Other returnees include seniors Lianne Sullivan and Margo Kaufman, junior Joan Rosen and sophmores Jean Berniche and Julie Simonds.

Getting their first taste of varsity competition Friday will be four new team members: Laurie Gibbons, Sally Rohan, Donna Snow and transfer Barbara Splewski. "It's great to get more girls out for the team, I'm anxious to see how they play in competition," said Coach McGahan.

McGahan thinks both Mount Holyoke and Rutgers will have improved from last spring. "We always shoot well up there," she said. "I hope we can get good team scoring." The match will give the team a chance to play the Mount Holyoke course before the EAIAW championship is held there next weekend. The match begins Friday at 1:00 on the Mount Holyoke campus course.

What Do You Want From College?
$$$$$$$$$$$$$???
Add It To Your Schedule.

There's nothing wrong with a little materialism.

We'll admit. One of the selling features of Army ROTC is just plain cold cash . . . nearly $2500 during your junior and senior years of college. There's also the opportunity for a full-tuition scholarship. And a competitive salary as an Army officer when you graduate.

But we've got other good things to offer you, too. College courses which challenge you both mentally and physically. Management training and experience you'll find valuable in civilian as well as in military jobs. And instant leadership responsibility in your first job after college.

If any of this interests you, check out Army ROTC. And even if you enroll for the money, you'll graduate with something worth a lot more . . . gold bars of an Army officer.

At 'Friendly Fenway': Sox lose once more;

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press

BOSTON [AP] — Carl Yastrzemski, thwarted in his bid for hit No.3,000, made a wild throw to home plate in the eighth inning, allowing two runs to score and the New York Yankees went on to an 8-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox Tuesday night.

Yastrzemski went hitless in three official at-bats against former teammate Luis Tiant and relievers Ron Davis, 11-2, and Rich Gossage as he failed for the second night to get hit No.3,000 of his career.

Yastrzemski drew a walk, popped to second baseman Willie Randolph in shallow center field, flied to right and fouled to catcher Jerry Narron.

Trailing 3-2, the Yankees tied the score on Reggie Jackson's eighth-inning double off reliever Tom Burgmeier, 3-2, and added the winning runs with the bases loaded as Yaz fielded a grounder by Graig Nettles, tried for the force at home and threw the ball past catcher Mike O'Berry.

Starter John Tudor opened the eighth by walking Bobby Murcer and Lou Piniella greeted Burgmeier with a single. After Jackson's RBI double, Burgmeier hit Chris Chambliss with a pitch to load the bases.

Jackson unloaded a two-run homer, his 24th, in the ninth.

The Red Sox scored three runs in the sixth inning on Fred Lynn's 37th homer of the season, a two-run shot into the left field screen, and Butch Hobson's RBI double.

The Yankees scored a run in the fourth on Piniella's sacrifice fly and added their second run in the seventh when pinchhitter Roy White singled home George Scott, who had doubled.

Yastrzemski's walk in the second inning off Tiant was his first since Aug. 13, 45 games ago.

Tiant, the former Red Sox ace making his first Fenway Park appearance since signing last winter with the Yankees as a free agent, then got Yaz to pop out in the fourth.

Yastrzemski flied out in the fifth against Davis and fouled out to Narron in the eighth against Gossage.

A crowd of 35,689, the biggest of the year at Fenway Park, was disappointed for the second straight night. Yastrzemski last stoked a hit on Sunday.

Gossage pitched two perfect innings to pick up his save and have the Yankees score a total of six runs in the eighth and ninth innings.

Lynn's homer was his first since Aug. 17 and tied a Fenway Park record of 27 in one season for a left-handed batter playing in Boston.

Civil Rights Commission urges per capita spending

HOUSTON [AP] —The U.S. Civil Rights Commission, reversing an earlier position, has suggested colleges and universities be required to immediately equalize per capita expenditures for men and women in all sports programs.

The commission in January had called for substantially the same amounts per capita in all programs except football. However, the agency said football expenditures should be phased into the per capita calculations over a five-year period.

The commission has no enforcement or legislative powers and it is now up to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to accept or reject the suggestion.

The revised recommendation was made at a meeting here prior to the opening of a twoday hearing on police practices.

Title IX of the 1972 amendments to the Higher Education Act prohibits sex discrimination in federally funded educational programs. HEW later issued a regulation calling for men and women to receive the same athletic benefits.

The indicated reasoning behind the January action was football expenses are much higher than for other sports and that football had no comparable spot in women's athletic programs.

The revised position was adopted after he commission heard arguments at meetings in April, June and July.

As approved, the new position withdraws the football phase-in and calls "for equal per capita expenditures for financially measurable factors for all sports without delay."

Such measurable factors were said to include athletic scholarships, recruiting costs and "all other readily measurable benefits and opportunities."

Yaz still one hit shy;

BOSTON[AP] — Carl Yastrzemski went hitless in Tuesday night's game against the New York Yankees, leaving him still one short of 3,000 career hits.

The 40-year-old all-star is bidding to become the 15th player in major league history to reach the 3,000 hit milestone.

New York won Tuesday night's game 8-3.

and Yanks set record

BOSTON [AP] — The New York Yankees became the first team in major league baseball history to play before 2,000,000 fans both home and on the road in three consecutive seasons.

Prior to Tuesday night's game at Fenway Park before a crowd of more than 30,000, the Yankees had drawn 1,997,664 on the road. They have drawn 2,354,056 at home.

The Yankee Standium single-season attendance mark in 2,373,901 and was expected to be surpassed this weekend.

Combined, the Yankees have played before 4,351,719 fans prior to Tuesday's game.

The Red Sox hold the American League record for home and road attendance of 4,503,756 in 1978.

A Rose by any other name

CINCINNATI [AP] — Karolyn Rose filed for divorce yesterday from Philadelphia Phillies first baseman Pete Rose.

The suit filed in Hamilton County Court of Domestic Relations charges gross neglect of duty and asks for a split of all property plus reasonable alimony.

The couple has two children, Fawn, 14, and Pete Jr., 9.

Rose, who played with the Cincinnati Reds for 16 years, moved to Philadelphia as a free agent last year after signing a multimillion dollar, four-year contract.

Baseball pennant races head into stretch run

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

With three weeks to go in the regular season, major league baseball has close races in three of its four divisions as teams battle for postseason playoff berths that will lead two of them to the World Series.

The closest races are in the National League where Pittsburgh and Montreal in the East and Houston and Cincinnati in the West are separated by slim margins. And both sets of NL contenders can determine their own fates because they play their division rivals head-tohead other down the stretch.

Pittsburgh, which went into Tuesday night's action one game ahead of Montreal, plays the Expos six times in its final 20 games. There's a two-game series in Montreal Sept. 17-18, followed by four games at Pittsburgh Sept. 24-25-26.

Actually, although behind in the standings, Montreal had two fewer losses than the Pirates as they began action this week. The Expos' deficit was in the win column, because they had played six fewer games than the Pirates.

Of the Pirates' last 20 games, 12 are scheduled for their home park, Three Rivers Stadium. After spending this week at home against St. Louis, the New York Mets and Montreal, Pittsburgh hits the road for series in Montreal, Philadelphia and Chicago before returning home to complete the season against the Expos and Chicago.

Montreal's last 26 games are split in half — 13 at home and 13 on the road. The Expos' stretch schedule included six doubleheaders — the first one came Tuesday night against Chicago at home. Two more doubleheaders come on consecutive days in New York Sept. 19-20.

In the NL West, Houston has the toughest scheduling problems. Of the Astros' final 19 games, 14 will be on the road, including a crucial two-game series which began in Cincinnati Tuesday night.

After that, Houston makes a west coast trip with stops in San Francisco and San Diego before returning home for their final five games of the season in Astrodome — two against Atlanta and three with the Reds Sept. 21-22-23. Then Houston finishes the season on the road with four games in Atlanta and three in Los Angeles.

Cincinnati plays eight of its final 18 at home. After the current two-game series with Houston at Riverfront Stadium, the Reds hit the road for a trip to Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego and Houston before returning home for the season's final six games against San Diego and Atlanta.

In the American League West, California had a comfortable four-game edge over defending champion Kansas City and 6¼ over Minnesota as Tuesday's action began. The Angels have 12 of their final 18 games on the road and play the Royals seven times — four in Kansas City Sept. 17-18-19-20 and three in Anaheim Sept. 24-25-26.

The series in KC concludes the Angels' current road trip with other stops in Chicago and Milwaukee. When California returns home, it faces Texas and then Kansas City again before going back on the road to finish the season in Texas.

Kansas City plays 12 of its last 18 at home and will meet tailenders Oakland and Seattle nine times in the final three weeks. The Royals are the only one of last year's four division champions — the New York Yankees, Los Angeles Dodgers and Philadelphia Phillies were the others — with a chance to repeat this season.

Minnesota also is in contention in the AL West but the Twins would need help to catch the Angels. The two teams do not meet again this season. The Twins had 19 games left, 12 on the road. That total includes a game against the New York Yankees which was rained out Aug. 26 and which will be made up only if it affects the outcome of the race.

In the American League East, the Baltimore Orioles seemed secure with a 12-game lead and the best record in baseball.

The best-of-5 league championship playoffs begin Tuesday, Oct. 2 and the World Series starts one week later, Tuesday, Oct. 9.

House kills bill to require draft registration

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON [AP] — The House rejected an attempt yesterday to require 18-yearold men to register for the military draft, something they haven't had to do since 1975.

By a vote of 252-163, House members turned down a plea by Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D-Miss., to require all 18-year-old men in the country to register beginning on Jan. 2, 1981.

The House voted 259-155 to take the draft-registration measure out of a $42.1 billion weapons bill and instead directed President Carter to conduct a study on the matter.

No young man has been required to register for military service since March 31, 1975. The last draftee was inducted in June 1973.

The proposal, which the House rejected yesterday, to renew draft registration, but not the draft itself, had been approved in May by the House Armed Services Committee.

Carter has opposed renewing draft registration. James T. McIntyre, director of Carter's Office of Management and Budget, had told House leaders: "It is not necessary to impose this burden on our nation and its youth."

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said he believed the House vote would end for the foreseeable future efforts in Congress to bring back registration.

"I think that'll be the end of it," O'Neill told reporters shortly before the vote. "The president has the power to renew draft registration. He doesn't feel there's an emergency and he doesn't see a need for it."

Fights are likely later in the week on funds in the bill for a fifth nuclear aircraft carrier and for the proposed new MX intercontinental ballistic missile. Carter already has vetoed the carrier once.

Violence

Lack of funding prevents protective campus action

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

Few of the June 1979 proposals made by the UMass Committee to Study Violence Against Women have been executed, due to lack of funding, according to police and physical plant officials.

Some of the report's proposals included better lighting on campus in high risk areas, emergency telephone lines in strategic areas on campus, and extension of the Univeristy transportation service to isolated areas and expansion of hours of operation.

According to a report compiled by the Department of Public Safety, personal violence crimes increased from 1977 to 1978.

An increase in the reported number of assaults and rapes of women was the impetus for an Area Survey of Campus Lighting and Accessability conducted from Fall 1978 into February 1979 by the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center of Educational Research and Advocacy, the SCERA report said.

The SCERA survey points to specific locations of poor and unlit areas on campus and major hazards and makes recommendations to correct them.

Thirty percent of the campus is classified as having poor lighting, according to the survey. Some of the worst areas on campus are isolated parking lots the survey said.

Two recommendations by SCERA included installing spotlights on the perimeters of all parking areas and placing an emergency call box in P lot. No such action has yet been taken according to Lawrence G. Holmes, assistant director of the UMass Police Dept.

Herbert Moulton, Physical Plant electrician, said new lighting fixtures have been installed. The north side of the Fine Arts Building, walkways between Johnson and Lewis dormitories in Northeast, and Hill dorm in Central now have better lighting. Lighting has also been installed in areas around University Apartments. Holmes said, "One of the darkest areas on campus is our own parking lot."

He said emergency call boxes have a crucial function, as expressed in a Hartford

Victim-police communication a must

By LINDA PLAUT

Over 50 percent of UMass women didn't report violent incidents in 1979, partly due to fear of how they would be handled by the Police Department, according to a recent survey by the Committee to Study Violence Against Women.

Assistant Director of UMass Security Lawrence Holmes said the community must become more involved.

There won't be any reduction in violent crime no matter what the preventions, he said, unless victims report violent and intimidating acts. However, a Public Relations Proposal for the Department of Public Safety by UMass student Lucas Feininger indicated 74 percent of UMass students did not know the emergency telephone number of the Police Department.

The Sensitive Crimes Unit of the Campus Police directed by Sgt. Philip J. Cavanaugh, was formed in October 1974, after rape laws in Massachusetts were updated to require municipal police establishment of rape prevention and counseling units.

Twelve police officers are unit members on a voluntary basis. Members are required to take a 40-hour course certified by the Commonwealth on methods of reporting and processing rape and counseling. They arranging medical and phychological attention for victims.

Cavanaugh stressed no immediate statement is forced from victims; the psychological and medical needs are attended to first. All conversations between police officers and victims are held in strict confidence. Officers type the report themselves. Victims are assured a one to one, private meeting with a trained police officer.

Every effort is made to provide a female police officer, Cavanaugh said, but there are only two in the department and this is not always possible.

The Sensitive Crimes Unite refers some victims to the Rape Task Force which works in conjunction with the University Health Services. Cavanaugh said everyone in the community should share a common goal — the needs of the victim are paramount.

Sargeant Mary Dumas, a member of the sensitive Crimes Unit and also a member of the Rape Task Force hopes to put together a pamphlet this year on prevention, laws, procedures and referrals.

U Mass system unique among area schools

The next time you're waiting for a UMass bus in sub-zero temperatures or a raging downpour, don't curse the UMass Transit Service. Rather, consider yourself fortunate that you have a bus to wait for at all.

The UMass Transit Service is unique when compared to those services offered by the other five state universities in New England.

At University of Rhode Island at Kingston, no bus service is offerred whatsoever, exceptythose provided by private carrier facilities, according to the Community Relations Office there.

Private carrier service is offerred at University of Maine at Orono. There is a shuttle bus provided, free-of-charge, to students who wish to travel between the Bangor and Orono campuses, but this is the only service provided.

The University of Vermont in Burlington, however offers no on-campus shuttle service. Nancy Drawbaugh, manager of the Family Housing Office at UVM, said "free bus service is provided only between a University-owned apartment complex, about five miles from campus, and various campus locations."

"The apartments in this complex are primarily for married students," she said, "But some single students may live there as an alternative to campus residence."

Costs are covered in the rental fee paid by the single students, Drawbaugh said. Married students are not allowed to ride the buses without paying a fee.

The University of Connecticut at Storrs operates a on-campus Shuttle Bus Service. "The routes are primarily for the convenience of commuters who park in outlying areas," said Supervisor of transportation Operation Harold Gagne.

The UConn shuttle bus operated five days a week, from 7:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. with a

Highjacker pleads social change

BONN, West Germany [AP] — A distraught young man pleading for "a humane world" hijacked a West German jetliner in flight yesterday and held out in a day-long standoff at the Bonn airport, insisting that the German leadership and people hear his demands for social change.

The unidentified hijacker, reportedly armed with a pistol, freed the 120 passengers and four of the eight crew members unharmed seven hours after the Lufthansa Boeing 727 landed at Bonn-Cologne Airport.

But as darkness fell he still held four crew members and demanded to talk to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and a television news crew to publicize his program.

The flight had originated in Paris, stopped in Frankfurt and was on its way to Bonn-Cologne when it was hijacked.

Pro-life pushed in House

WASHINGTON [AP] - The sponsor of a proposed anti-abortion constitutional amendment said yesterday he will try to force his measure to a House vote by petition.

The proposed amendment, now stuck in committee, could be dislodged and brought to the House floor if Rep. Robert K. Dornan, R-Calif., could persuade 218 members, a simple House majority, to sign a petition demanding that action.

The proposal, which also has been introduced in the Senate by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., does not mention abortion but would in effect, make taking the life of an unborn child the same as taking the life of anyone after birth.

The text of the amendment reads: "The paramount right to life is vested in each human being from the moment of fertilization without regard to age, health or condition of dependency."

Dornan announced his proposed action at a news conference with March for Life, an anti-abortion organization.

Water contamination studied

BOSTON [AP] - A state commission worried about the purity of Massachusetts drinking water wants tougher laws governing undergound storage tanks for oil and gas.

The Special Legislative Commission on Water Supply also called yesterday for stricter rules on the disposal of certain household products such as septic tank cleaners and engine degreasers.

The panel, which has been studying water problems for two years, issued a report summarizing incidents of contamination in 43 communities over the last 15 months.

"The impact of these incidents is sobering," a commission statement said. "A total of 30 municipal wells or well fields have been rendered unusable, with an estimated loss of 18 million gallons per day of potential yield."

In at least six cases, the commission found that a local water supply was threatened by leaking oil or gasoline from underground storage tanks but in most of the cases contamination was avoided.

Sicilian volcano kills six

CATANIA, Sicily [AP] — Mount Etna spewed hot rocks, gas and ash on a group of 200 tourists yesterday near the summit, killing six persons and injuring at least 20, police reported.

Police said three of the dead were Italians, one was a French woman, and the other two were not identified.

A mountain guide said the crater "exploded like a cannon."

The state-run television said at least 35 were injured. Police said some were seriously burned and taken to hospitals at the foot of the mountain.

The tourists had gone to the summit to observe activity in several craters on Europe's tallest and most active volcano, which has erupted several times in recent weeks.

Hurricane Frederick hits Southern Gulf Coast

By MATT BOKOR
Associated Press Writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. [AP] — Hurricane Frederic bore down yesterday on the central Gulf Coast area laid waste by another storm a decade ago and nearly 400,000 people were ordered to get out of the path of its 130 mph winds and 15-foot tides.

Massive evacuations were under way in four states. National Guardsmen were alerted in Florida, Alabama and Mississippi.

Forecasters warned the hurricane would hit the shore somewhere in an area stretching from Pensacola, Fla., to Gulfport, Miss., by late last evening or night.

The National Hurricane Center in Miami described the hurricane as "extremely dangerous," one of the deadliest Gulf of Mexico storms of the century.

By noon yesterday, gale force winds up to 75 mph were buffeting the coastline near Mobile, Ala., forcing Florida National Guardsmen to close Interstate 10 eastward into Florida.

In Mississippi, where Red Cross officials said 150,000 had fled inland, tides six feet above normal were reported in Jackson County near the Alabama line. Gov. Cliff Finch authorized the mobilization of the National Guard to assist local authorities.

Yesterday afternoon, Frederic was located 150 miles south of Penscacola. Little change in the storm's strength was expected before it reached land. Hurricane warnings were up from Panama City, Fla., to Grand Isle, La.

The strongest winds were around the storm's eye, which varied from 20 to 40 miles in width, said forecaster Vaughn Carmichael. Gales extended out 150 miles to the north and 150 miles to the south of the eye. A tidal surge of 10 to 15 feet above normal was predicted up to 50 miles to the east of where the eye crosses the coast.

In Florida, where Gov. Bob Graham ordered out 1,000 National Guardsmen to assist with the evacuation of 150,000 persons, police said they would use force, if necessary, to move people out of the danger areas.

Mayor Gary Greenough of Mobile, Ala., repeatedly urged 70,000 residents of the area to evacuate.

Along the Mississippi coast, where Hurricane Camille left 250 dead and damage in the millions of dollars when it crashed inland near Gulfport 10 years ago, the residents needed little prodding to flee.

Another 20,000 were evacuated in Louisiana, mainly from Plaquemines Parish.

The National Guard was called out in the Florida Panhandle, where civil defense officials estimated about 150,000 were being evacuated from low-lying areas in five counties.

Vance negotiates Soviet position

By ROBERT B. CULLEN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Aides say Secretary of State Cyrus Vance is trying to cool down the crisis atmosphere over the presence of Soviet troops in Cuba by conducting a prolonged series of low key negotiations with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin.

The two continued their discussion of the issue yesterday over a lunch of gazpacho soup, steak and salad. There was no statement after the meeting.

Senate consideration of the SALT II treaty was virtually at a standstill pending the outcome of negotiations on the situation.

The Carter administration continued to refuse all comment on the substance of the Vance-Dobrynin negotiations.

But officials said they expected a long series of meetings might be necessary to achieve a satisfactory settlement.

This, they added, was part of the administration strategy. By meeting often and saying nothing, the administration hopes to develop an atmosphere of routine business.

This was seen as a way to end the crisis atmosphere which rapidly arose during last week's series of revelations and news conferences.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said, however, that the administration has not been impressed by public Soviet denials that the troops in Cuba form a combat unit.

He said there is no dispute within the administration about that evaluation, which intelligence analysts reached last month.

Spokesman Carter denied a contention by retired Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub that the Soviets were in Cuba to guard nuclear bombs on MiG-23 fighters.

He said there is no evidence that there are nuclear weapons in Cuba, or that the MiGs are configured to carry nuclear bombs.

Meanwhile, President Carter said yesterday that rejection of the SALT II treaty could cause America's allies "to search for a weaker relationship with us and a stronger relationship with the Soviet Union and others."

David Kennedy hospitalized

By ARTHUR EVERETT
Asssociated Press

NEW YORK [AP] — David Kennedy, 24-year-old son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, was in "very serious" condition at a Boston hospital with a heart infection, his family announced yesterday.

Technically known as a bacterial endocarditis, the infection can invade the body through even the most minor break in the skin and is sometimes associated with narcotics abuse.

Last Wednesday, Kennedy reported he was robbed of $30 in a seedy Harlem hotel. Police described the premises as a dope supermarket, and a police source said Kennedy was there in quest of cocaine.

A source familar with the situation said Kennedy is being treated at the hospital for drug addiction. Asking that his name not be used, the source added: "This is part of the thing. Both are related."

The family announcement on young Kennedy's hospitalization said without elaboration that he faces "a long and hard personal as well as medical struggle."

Dr. Warren D. Johnson Jr1, an associate professor of medicine at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center who was asked to describe bacterial endorcarditis, called it an infection of the inner lining of the heart, part of which extends over the heart valves.

The infection can invade the body through the most minor of skin nicks, he said, and even through the mouth when oral hygiene is poor. The Merck Manual, a handbook for doctors, says the disease may follow "self-administration of narcotics."

David, a Harvard dropout, was the fourth of 10 children born to Robert and Ethel Kennedy. He was 12 when his father was assassinated while campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination in Los Angeles

Nam vets blast Senate

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Mary Jane Paiko, right, commuter senator and member of the SCERA Women's Issues Team, talks with a student at last night's student senate meeting. (Staff photo by Fadi Shawish).

Four Viet Nam veterans last night sparked an Undergraduate Student Senate meeting with firey debate about Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden's Sept. 30 visit here. The veterans said they opposed the political couple's visit and charged the senate with not providing the veterans with advance notice of the event and with giving students "erroneous figures" of the event's cost.

For lack of quorum, the senate could not vote on a plan that would liquidate its $178,614.77 deficit. The plan would call for 15 percent cut in all Recognized Student Organizations except the transit services, Office of Third World Affairs, capital equipment and stabilization costs.

Senate Co-Treasurer Patrick Hart said this plan would liquidate the deficit in two years and would allow no further increase in the student activities tax fee until 1981.He said the senate will know by October, after all activities fees are accounted for, the precise deficit figure and what cuts will accomodate its liquidation.

Speaking for the Veterans Services Organization, Paul Whiters, 32, who spent five of his 11 years of service in Viet Nam, said the senate and the senate-funded Distinguished Visitor's Program had "ignored" his attempts to get advance notice of Fonda's and Hayden's appearance.

"They (the senate) covered the whole thing up, so the veterans wouldn't have a chance to rebuttal," Withers said.

The senate is required to give advance notice of an event to all RSO groups, Withers said.

"There's nothing spelled out that DVP (who will be sponsoring the event) has to give advance notice. We don't tell DVP what to spend their money on," Student Government Association Co-President Richard LaVoice said.

The senate told students Fonda's and Hayden's appearance would cost $4,500, when "actually it totaled about seven or eight grand — what with travel costs and eight months of calls to California," Withers said.

About 100 veterans will storm Curry Hicks Cage the night of the event and "question Fonda off her ass," Withers said.

"Jane Fonda knows her ass from her elvow," Withers said, "She'll be giving the same old rap that she gave five years ago, that she gave 10 years ago. She is going to attempt to push off her pro-Communist ideals. She's saying, 'Wow, Communists are cool.'

"But I've seen Communists act when they go into a village. I've been there — not only Viet Nam, but Laos and Cambodia too. I've seen how the communists act."

'Feed your soul' with the Sikh Darma

By CAROLYN MOONEY
Collegian Staff

At least one group of Amherst residents—the turban-wearing members of the Sikh Darma religion—seem to have transcended the increasing frustration of UMass life. They offer a free "Feed your soul" dinner once a week to share a part of their lifestyle.

Held every Monday night at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst, the vegetarian dinners are free to anyone and usually attract about 12-15 people. A typical dinner of lentil "dahl" or soup, buckwheat, and plain yogurt is served to those sitting on the floor, with shoes off, a background of peaceful Indian music.

The dinners were started May 11 in honor of the 500th anniversary of the birth of Guru Amar Das, founder of the Sikh Darma free kitchens. Guru Amar Das offered free kitchens in India in the 1400's in an attempt to break down the caste system. All people, regardless of their social caste, ate together.

The Sikhs, as they call themselves, are part of a worldwide organization called the 3HO Foundation, which stands for Happy, Healthy, and Holy. According to member Siri Bhagwati Kaur Khalsa, a counseling student at UMass, the Sikhs believe in basic living, working, and raising families in peace in the existing society. Their religion, which is a cross between Islamic and Hinduism, praises one God and incorporates meditation and Kundalini yoga.

At their Ashram or home, the Sikhs get up each morning at 3:30 for a prayer, an hour of yoga, and an hour of meditation. By 7 a.m. they are ready to begin the day. Their traditional dress of a white turban, long white blouse and pants which are baggy at the top and close-fitting at the calves is a symbol of dignity and purity.

But, Siri Bhagwati Kaur pointed out, the turban also stimulates acapuncture points, an integral part of Kundalini yoga, and the pants are loose at the top to keep air temperature the same at the pelvic bone. The Sikhs also do not cut any of their body hairs.

"We wear white to stand out, and because it includes all the colors," Siri Bhagwati Kaur said. She said the Ashrum contained very little furniture to allow more room for yoga, "and because we don't want to clutter."

When Siri Bhagwati Kaur (her first name) chose to become a Sikh four years ago, she went to Yogi Bhajam, the Sikhs' spiritual advisor in the U.S. to be named. 'Because we consider ourselves a family, all Sikhs have the same last name—Khalsa," she said.

When questioned about her parents' reaction to her religion, she said, "They still aren't aware of the full impact of the religion, but they're happy that I'm happy."

Mike Plum, a graduate student in physics here, plans to attend the dinners regularly.

"It's peaceful, and there's good food and good company," he observed.

Plum practices yoga and meditation regularly, and believes it has made him "more awake and aware.

"Some day I'd love to do the whole Sikh bit—white clothes and everything—for a whole year," he said. "Then I'd either stop or keep doing it for the rest of my life."

But when asked how it would affect a possible career in industry, Plum conceded he "would not be willing to go the whole way" if he had a job in industry. But, he said, he would continue with yoga, since yoga "would improve any career."

The Sikhs offer community classes in Amherst in Kundalini yoga and vegetarian cooking, and also teach a physical education course in yoga at the University.

Library access limited

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

Though professors and graduate students will probably be allowed access to the main library, Chancelior Henry Koffler said yesterday the majority of students would be unable to enter the crumbling 28-story structure because of fire and general safety hazards involved.

Professors and graduate students, at a Massachusetts Society of Professors subcommittee meeting in the Chancellor's board room, said they needed access to the library if they were to continue their research projects, many funded through federal grants.

Koffler said undergraduates would be denied access to the building because of limited entrance space constituting a fire hazard. There is also the possibility of bricks or whole panels falling from the structure, he said resulting in a cave-in of the underground tunnel.

Asked whether graduate students would be allowed access to the library, Koffler said "absolutely."

About 250,000 books are currently being moved to the Goodell Building for use by the entire campus population.

Koffler said, a paging system would be instituted, allowing students to order books from the stacks in the main library. The ordered book would be placed on the shelves of the Goodell facility.

Koffler said Smith, Amherst, and Hampshire colleges have offered to open their libraries for UMass students. He said, however, the problem would not be alleviated by students using those libraries.

Koffler said additional UMass library personell have been added to Morrill, Physical Science, Jones and Amherst College libraries.

He said additional buildings on campus may be opened for students to study in, but that additional security personnel would then have to be added as well.

"It is obviously not the most desirable of situations," Koffler said.

Protesters plan action for support

By PHIL LEMMAN
Collegian Staff

Anti-nuclear and other campus and area protest groups have planned marches, rallies, debates and civil disobedience actions for the coming months to bring their causes to the attention of the general public.

Perhaps the most significant of these will be the planned occupation of the Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire Oct. 6. Several area groups are involved in the planning and execution of this demonstration against nuclear power.

The Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide and the Alternative Energy Coalition are among the local groups recruiting people to participate in the non-violent action.

"We feel it important to occupy Seabrook and make a strong statement against nuclear power," a SCANN spokesperson said last night.

Occupation length is termed "indefinate", but planners said they think most people will only stay for the weekend at most bacause of other responsibilities.

All participants in the October demonstration from SCANN will be trained in non-violent civil disobediance before they arrive at the Seabrook site. Participants will be formed into "affinity groups" of 10-20 people with their own legal and medical personnel. Planners hope this will reduce confusion at the protest.

Other SCANN activities in preparation for the occupation include dormitory and classroom presentations, a proposed debate between group members and utility officials, street theater, food collection for the occupation and an "Arm-band Day" when SCANN members distribute arm-bands to UMass students in support of Seabrook action.

The Coalition also plans a march and a rally Saturday, Sept. 15 to include anti-nuclear speakers. The march will begin at 11:30 a.m. from Amherst Regional High School and end at the Amherst Commons where the rally is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. For further information call the Coalition office in Amherst at 253-9998.

Another civil disobediance action is planned at the Rowe Nuclear Power Station in Rowe, Mass. in support of 21 defendents soon coming to trial on criminal trespass charges.

The charges stem from another anti-nuclear demonstration at the Rowe plant June 2.

The defendants are trying to use a "choice of evils" defense in the case. "Choice of evils" is a common law defense under which defendants claim the crime of trespass as a lesser crime than nuclear radiation from the plant.

A ruling on the motion handed down after a hearing in Greenfield District Court Sept. 24. A similar motion was turned down during a criminal trespass case in New Hampshire last year.

Correction

It was incorrectly reported in Tuesday's Collegian that $4,500 would be total cost to the Distinguished Visitor's Program for the Jane Fonda—Tom Hayden appearance on September 30. Initial fee is $4,500. Total expenses will run between $7,000 and $8,000.

DVP Vice-chairman Howard Goldman yesterday said the yearly program commitment is $5,000 not $10,000 to International Women's Week.

'Right on red' takes effect

By HOWARD DUPUIS
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts on Jan. 1, 1980 will be the last state in the country to legalize the right on red law. The state stood to lose 1.7 million dollars in federal funds, 80 percent of the funding of the state energy office, if the right on red law was not put into effect.

The energy office is projecting a statewide savings of 2.1 million gallons of gasoline per year once the new law is put into action.

Some opposition to the right on red law has come from various handicapped organizations throughout the country. Paul Appleby, the co-ordinator of handicapped student affairs at UMass says it is "difficult at best right now" for handicapped persons to cross at certain intersections. There is some concern about drivers not actually coming to a complete stop before turning right at red lights, he said.

Amherst Town Manager Louis Hayward said Appleby's comment is "a good point, and it is something that must be taken into consideration."

But, Hayward said, some town intersections will be exempted from the law and signs will be posted forbidding right turns at these intersections.

The town manager's staff, which consists of the police chief, public works director, planning director and town manager, will decide which intersections will be affected, Hayward said.

The recommendation then goes to the Amherst Board of Selectmen, and is passed on for state approval.

State criteria for the posting of no right on red signs states effected intersections must have more than four approaches, an exclusive walk phase and a possible left turn directly after a right.

Hayward said the intersections in Amherst with an exclusive walk phase "are the ones that come to mind initially" to be posted no right turn on red.

According to UMass police, the traffic lights at the intersection of Massachusetts Avenue and North Pleasant Street, the only lights controlled by the university, "will most likely remain unchanged" by the new law because of the green arrows which already control right turns.

Will Kennedy get the last laugh?

Kennedy

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's insistence that he hasn't decided whether to challenge President Carter for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination, party leaders looked ahead yesterday to "one of the classic struggles of our political history."

That assessment came from Democratic Party Chairman John C. White, a Carter supporter, who said in a television interview:

"If you put the two most powerful figures in America in a contest against each other, the potential for a bloody, mangling nomination process is there.

"Sen. Kennedy obviously will win some (primaries). The president will win some...But there is no way, no way, you can count the president out of this nomination process."

Kennedy agreed with that view. He told reporters that "I think it would be a hard-fought battle, both the nomination and the election."

Kennedy headed a Judiciary Committee hearing yesterday on the proposed charter for the FBI. When it ended, reporters gathered around him as he left the room. All the questions dealt with politics.

The Massachusetts senator repeated his position that "I have not foreclosed the possibility of running."

That has become his new, standard reponse to questions about 1980, replacing his preAugust response: "I expect the president to be renominated, I expect him to be re-elected and I intend to support him."

Sen. Alan Cranston, assistant Democratic leader of the Senate, said that in 1975 no one gave Carter a serious chance for the 1976 nomination. Asked about Kennedy, Cranston replied: "He's not a man to be underestimated."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said a battle could revitalize the party.

"The party has always been in the best shape when the arguments and bickering are gotten out of the way the year before (presidential) elections," the speaker told reporters.

Weicker predicts Carter will lose

By MARK SULLIVAN
Associated Press

HARTFORD (AP) — Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts will easily take the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination from President Carter, Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker predicted yesterday while flying to Hartford aboard Air Force One as the president's guest.

"I don't think there's any question about it," Weicker said later in Hartford. "There's too many Democratic congressmen and senators with their necks on the line. They want the strongest possible person at the top of the ticket."

But Carter, in his speech to a forum of the American Association of Retired Persons and the National Retired Teachers Association at the Hartford Civic Center, made it plain he will fight to keep his job.

"While I admire you, I must admit I'm not tempted to join your ranks anytime soon," the president said.

The two groups of retired persons met in Hartford to discuss national health insurance programs and generally they favor Kennedy's proposal over that of Carter. But the president strongly defended his program during his 2¼-hour visit to Connecticut.

"The difference in my opinion is that mine can pass," Carter told one questioner from the audience of 2,000. "Both plans are good, but I believe mine can pass."

Weicker, a co-sponsor of the Kennedy plan, spoke to the crowd after Carter and criticized the administration's proposal. He said Carter's plan would simply "graft" national health insurance onto the existing Medicare system with all its faults.

"He's grafting a program onto a program that already has many problems," Weicker said. "I believe in an entirely new program."

While aboard Air Force One on the flight from Washington, Weicker discounted the argument of Carter supporters that a Kennedy-Carter fight would split the Democrats and insure a Republican victory in 1980.

"You don't think that every Republican senator is sitting back there hoping the fellow up there is going to head the ticket?" the Connecticut Republican said.

Weicker said Carter is beset by problems from inflation to low standings in the polls and that means Kennedy will eventually try to get the nomination.

"I don't think it would be close...Kennedy would take it in a walk," Weicker said.

But Connecticut's top Democrat, Gov. Ella Grasso, continued her strong support for Carter which developed after her participation in the Camp David domestic summit.

"President Carter is a fearless and indefatigable leader," she said as she introduced him in Hartford. "His compassion, concern and commitment are an inspiration to us all."

Proletariat must rise in Iran

To the Editor:

As Khomeini's troops massacre Kurds, as unveiled women are stoned by Islamic fanatics, and as dozens of leftists and worker militants face imprisonment or execution, the reactionary nature of the Islamic Republic could not be more evident.

Yet only months ago virtually the entire left--in Iran and internationally--proclaimed allegiance to Khomeini as a "progressive" alternative to the shah. Though Khomeini, from the start, did not disguise his abhorrence for "satanic Marxists", his left-wing apostles persisted in their support to him, construing every utterance from Qom as anti-imperialist and even justifying women donning the veil as a "symbol of opposition to the shah".

Thus, now, as the Ayatollah's firing squads impose "Islamic justice", these ostensible leftists bear responsibility for delivering the Iranian masses into the hands of reaction.

The power to throw off the yoke of Islamic rule lies in Iran's millions-strong proletariat.

The Iranian working class can be the vanguard of socialist revolution throughout the entire Middle East, sweeping aside all the shahs, sheiks, and colonels who enforce imperialist exploitation.

But this historic task can be fulfilled only under the leadership of an authentically revolutionary party, based on a Trotskyist program and built through unrelenting political struggle against all forms of capitalist oppression.

SCERA exists to help students

To the Editor—

The year has just begun yet we have already encountered a major setback. Our library, with structural difficulties, is being closed indefinitely. This is one of a number of student concerns.

The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy is set up to assist students in dealing with problems of this sort.

Currently the Center is involved in student issues such as the military draft, representation on departmental councils, the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide, upcoming dorm leases, etc.

SCERA serves as a resources back-up to the Student Senate and has been influential in a number of basic academic, residential, campus-wide, and off campus changes.

SCERA is capable of assisting in any area relating to you as a student at UMass. Whether you need information, have a grievance, or just want to find out what is going on, the Center is open to you. SCERA is located in 422 of the Student Union Building, one floor above ground level.

Everyone is welcome.

There are a lot of slobs on campus

To the Editor:

You have been on campus for one week and this campus is a mess already. I walked through Orchard Hill and Central Saturday morning and the litter was unbelievable.

There were beer bottles and cans everywhere.

They were on the grass, in the roads, even left standing on cars. This is not only unsightly but it is very dangerous. How would you like to walk on a broken beer bottle hidden in the grass or be hit by flying glass if a lawn mower happens to run over it?

Perhaps the University should leave the litter around and let it pile up. Maybe, if enough people are hurt, or enough tires go flat, you slobs will begin to use the receptacles that are in abundance around campus.

A crisis with energy

While we are trying to deal with the problems here at UMass, Congress is seeking to solve the energy crises. President Carter is pushing to complete action on a package of enormously damaging energy proposals:

•an ENERGY MOBILIZATION BOARD with unlimited powers to waive environmental protection laws and to bypass due process procedures for "priority energy projects" and

•an ENERGY SECURITY CORPORATION to pump BILLIONS of our tax dollars into high technology energy developments, especially

Abbe Bjorklund

•subsidized SYNTHETIC FUELS—an unproven, untested technology with enormous environmental impacts and astronomical costs.

These proposals gravely threaten our environmental protection laws such as the Clean Air and Water Acts, the stripmine law, the National Environmental Policy Act, and they would open up our National Parks such as Yosemite, Yellowstone, and the Grand Canyon to be sacrificed in the name of energy.

These proposals also threaten our democratic process and the input of common citizens into energy decisions by bypassing public hearings, public comment periods, environmental impact statements, and rights to judicial review.

Oil companies and other special interest lobbies have worked hard to create this situation.

Many of them would be eligible for government funds through the Energy Security Corporation for research and development. Many of them already own large tracts of shale and coal deposits ready to be used for synthetic fuel development.

Mass production of synfuels would leach toxic chemicals into the environment, use immense quantities of water, and cost twice as much as imported oil.

A better program is available that is capable of producing more energy at lower costs with far less environmental impact. The feasibility of these alternatives are well documented by the National Academy of Sciences, the Council on Environmental Quality, and the Harvard Business School. We could cut energy consumption 30-40 percent if the billions of dollars Carter wants to invest in the Energy Security Corporation were invested in energy conservation by increasing efficiency in industry and the heating of buildings. Major investments could be made in solar and wind power applications in building design, agriculture, and industry.

Great improvements could be made in public transportation and more efficient autos.

These sorts of programs can meet our needs far into the future.

They can reduce our oil imports by more, at less cost, with more employment.

We would have reduced inflationary impacts, without resorting to more nuclear plants, and with far less environmental damage. But in the President's plan, out of $142 billion, only $5.5 billion over 10 years is targeted for these conservation, solar and renuable energy efforts.

Our representatives in Congress think that we are sick enough of gasoline lines that we are willing to further sacrifice our environment. Carter's proposed program is the sort of massive, high-technology approach that politicians can point to as "what I'm doing about the energy problem."

They think of the Energy Mobilization Board as a way to cut government red tape and forget that due process safeguards are overridden.

Abbe Bjorklund is a Collegian guest columnist.

A bit of bathroom humor

I grew up in a coed bathroom - though I didn't know it at the time.

In fact my mother (who is, I suppose, the opposite sex) taught me how to use a coed bathroom and after I learned to use one properly my life was filled with swirling toilet sounds and nylon bristles scrubbing pearly white sounds and antiseptic aerosol pine tree smells and Crest regular, mint, and no-lead tastes and, after my sister had been in the bathroom long enough to have moved out of the house, raised her own family, and been back visiting for Christmas vacation, perfume, hair conditioner, dirty towel, and bathwater salt smells; and, above all, a coed bathroom was a place to excite your senses.

Coed bathrooms are different here though.

I think UMass coed bathrooms are my favorite. If God ever comes to UMass to take a course and wash himself (think what you could sell the water for) or goes to the bathroom, he will surely deem those consecrated sinks and toilets. Not that God would ever study at UMass (he would probably take his courses at Harvard) but he would worship our coed bathrooms.

Yesterday I met someone's mother in the bathroom on my floor; well, I never actually ever saw her but, like two horses that talked, we exchanged viewpoints from opposite sides of our respective stalls. Also, like two Mr. Eds who crouched, we sat on toilets in our stalls which, I think, bonded us as quick and incontestable friends forever. She said she had never been in a coed bathroom before, much less sat chatting on a toilet. But, after I spoke with her she said she would, from that time on a UMass toilet, frequent only coed bathrooms, and if none were available in her home or office she would use the men's room, thereby making it a coed bathroom. Coed bathrooms might become her passion.

I told her that she grew up in a coed bathroom - though she didn't know it at the time and that coed bathrooms exist to bring boys and girls closer together and that the world would be safe for intersexual relationships if all bathrooms were coed.

I said I bet there are coed bathrooms in heaven, and boy and girl angels wash and brush their teeth together every night; even God and Mrs. God share the same bathroom. So do the Devil and Mrs. Devil, I added.

When I found my dorm it didn't have a separate boy's and girl's rooms, instead, like the bathroom I grew up in - though I only just realized it - both sexes shared the same toilets and sinks.

I thought up an alternative: I brushed my teeth in an obscure Bartlett Hall bathroom on the fourth floor where the last person to go there was a southern sympathizer during the Civil war who scribbled "Yankees go home" on the wall; I took my baths in the campus pond at night, and I went to the bathroom at Mount Sugarloaf behind a tree, but I had to skip all my classes so, unwillingly, I discovered the pleasures of UMass coed bathrooms.

Coed bathrooms consume most of my time now, and I do my homework on the toilet and sometimes sleep in the showers. Though UMass coed bathrooms are different from the ones I grew up in, and the sound of my mother toilet training me has been replaced by the sound of ten girls brushing their teeth with Aqua Fresh and trying to speak through the green foam, and the deodorant smell is sometimes weaker than spilled weekend beer smells, and pretty girls aren't as pretty when they greet you at the door at 7:00, I think God would still speak out in favor of coed bathrooms.

Richard Card likes coed bathrooms very, very much.

England must stay in Ireland

Irish-American Catholics have left Ireland; and therefore should leave the problems of northern Ireland to the northern Irish, the majority of whom in a July public-opinion survey wished British troops to stay.

David Sheehy's column in Monday's Collegian well reflected those Americans of Irish-Catholic descent who are using their high office to exert pressure on the British government, such as Gov. Hugh Carey, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan and Speaker of the House Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr.

Peter Smerdon

While condemning the death of Lord Mountbatten as "murder" by the "terrorist" Irish Republican Army, David Sheehy claimed that it was "a desperate call for help from a desperate people." It is either one or the other; there is little moral middle ground for Catholic consciences.

The pressure that many Americans bring, to bear on Britain to withdraw their troops directly, aids the terrorists in their murders.

Every Catholic-American should be silent, or should actually leave for the streets of Londonderry to kill and be killed.

The recent claims of an IRA member in America that the Federal Customs Service and New York City union bosses helped him to smuggle American arms to Ireland, well reflect the ease with which American sympathizers have fed the fires in northern Ireland.

Americans must understand the British government's view that troops cannot be withdrawn in the face of terrorist pressure, because it would be against the desires of the northern Irish. A recent survey in the province showed that 74 percent of respondents wanted British troops to stay: 91 percent of the Protestant respondents and 47 percent of the Catholic respondents wanted this.

The struggle has steadily deepened over the past few years, intensifying British fears of a blood-bath without the army presence. The British may cause more strife than they prevent in northern Ireland, but, until the IRA shows itself capable of engaging in a peaceful dialogue with the Protestants, the troops are bound to remain.

Britain cannot unite Ireland without the consent of a majority of the northern Irish population. That consent will not be forthcoming while the IRA continues fighting. The solution remains a cliche which nevertheless is still true: Only through peaceful dialogue will the situation be reassessed, and only peaceful dialogue will persuade the British government to withdraw the troops.

The British army, despite the natural atrocities which take place on both sides in such a terrible situation, is not the agressor, so a continuing battle with them is not the way to gain the necessary political and constitutional changes in northern Ireland. Only peace can bring fundamental changes in Irish society, while two thousand more deaths in the next decade will only bring misery for all parties.

David Sheehy claimed that "the British response is critical" but the British cannot respond until civilized dialogue takes place between all parties, whatever their religion or nationality.

The British have not tried to "pass the buck," in fact "the buck" never left northern Ireland.

Peking masses to speak

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — A poster on Peking's "Democracy Wall" has called for a mass gathering in vast Tien An Men square today to discuss the nature of China's socialism. The assembly, if it takes place, may provide a new test of the extent of official toleration.

Angry posters have been blossoming on "Democracy Wall." Magazines of art and ideas again are snatched up by clamoring youths. Ragged petitioners sit in on the government's doorstep. Student protesters march dowr the capital's main avenue. All this has been taking place in Peking with tacit official approval.

Not since the ill-fated human rights movement of last spring has the intellectual climate been so open, has the Communist Party permitted so much freedom of speech and outright dissent.

During the "Peking spring" of earlier this year, a flood of posters appeared on Democracy Wall demanding greater observance of human rights and more democracy and criticizing the Communist Party.

But the government finally clamped down, banning such political posters, and 30 to 40 young activists were arrested. They are still being held without trial.

The change has been especially evident in the past two weeks.

"It's just like last spring," said one observer. "After the crackdown, protesters would not have been allowed to take 10 steps down the street."

The stronger position of Senior Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping (Teng Hsiao-ping) is believed to be largely responsible for the new leeway. He is believed to have overcome some political resistance in July and given the nod to a more open forum for dissent. How long it will last and how far it will go are not known, however.

Unlike the voice of last spring, the voice of this autumn does not directly attack the party, but the posters on Democracy Wall bitterly criticize individuals, institutins and the society.

More than a half-dozen homeprinted youth magazines again are on sale and quickly sold out, compared with 15 or 20 last spring. Last Sunday, 300 persons gathered in a park to meet writers of the literary journal "Today." A young editor said the magazine's goal is "to break the stagnation in art. Art should not be a tool of politics as it has been."

Insurance Company slogan, "The best protection is prevention."

Holmes said five emergency telephone lines should be installed on campus in Memorial Hall, the Southwest and Northeast residential Areas in Lot 22, and Lot 44—but, he said, the current university budget can't afford the service.

He said new lines have been added to the current system within the department because immediate connections were not always possible. The department has a rape line, 545-2677 (K-COPS), which is an incoming line only. This special line is required by law.

There are no additional patrol positions this year, according to Holmes. The department's personnel strength has been on a general decline since 1972. More funding would be required to increase the force.

The student advisory committee requested more Orchard Hill bus routes because of later library hours. The Campus Shuttle-Orchard Hill bus now runs an hour later Monday through Friday, going out of service at 12:37 a.m. This is approximately four more loops around the circuit, according to Alan Byam, Operations Manager for UMass Transit.

★ China

The new openness has allowed street protests as well as posters and prose.

Paupers from distant provinces have been demonstrating in Peking since early August, seeking hearings for their complaints. Several hundred descended on Chungnanhai, the government seat, and sat in for 12 days. Police made no effort to remove them until the government finally called a halt last Saturday and evicted them.

On Monday, several hundred students demanding admission to Peking colleges blocked traffic and marched for 45 minutes down the broad Changan Avenue. They sat in at the city hall and pasted up posters on the walls.

They returned Tuesday and police made no effort to move them. Officials met for hours with student representatives and agreed to help some of them.

These laments and demands would not be audible without the assent of China's top leaders, especially Deng.

Railroad strikers face charges

BOSTON (AP) — Railroad workers conducting a wildcat strike that has halted commuter trains in and out of Boston and stalled freight on many Boston & Maine lines face contempt charges for defying federal court orders.

B&M attorney Sidney Weinburg said yesterday he will argue for contempt citations against five fired B&M employees and may file additional contempt motions in U.S. District Court at 9 a.m. Thursday.

complement of six buses. Two buses continue operation between 5:00 p.m. and 10:00 p.m., Gagne said.

Completely funded by the University, the service operates on a free-of-charge basis to members of the UConn community. "On Thursday and Friday nights, from 6:00 p.m. to 12 midnight, we operate a route to the Holiday Mall for student benefit," Gagne said. "There is a package store and a grocery store ther," he added.

The University of New Hampshire at Durham has no on-campus shuttle service, but does operate five routes daily to the outlying communities.

Mike Niese, supervisor of the UNH Transit Service, said approximately 2,800 people ride UNH buses daily. "Our operation is geared toward the students who live in the apartment complexes which surround Durham," he said.

The bus service is provided free-of-charge to the students who live off-campus, Niese said. These students account for 5o percent of the total UNH student population.

"There has been a big swing toward employment of the bus service," Niese said. "Our ridership has increased 170 percent over the last two years. The fuel problems which we have experienced have had a substantial impact," he added.

Recent price increases in gasoline costs and availability of fuel has also led to an increase in ridership at UMass, according to Bill Barrett, director of Transportation and Parking there.

The UMass Transit Service, which began as a two-bus, Student Senate operated, shuttle route in 1969, has expanded steadily to its present complement of nearly 30 buses, with an annual operating budget of around $500,000, Barrett said.

The Transit Service operated 10 routes, servicing a daily average of 20,000 people.

"Two routes on-campus provide campus mobility and service to the parking lots; two routes are outreach routes, serving Amherst, Belchertown, Sunderland, and South Deerfield; two routes are town routes to Echo Hill and Orchard Valley; and four most frequently used routes service the major apartment complexes in North and South Amherst, Sunderland, and along Belchertown Road," Al Byam, Operations Manager for the Transit Service, said.

The Transit Service affiliation with the Pioneer Valley Authority began in 1976, according to Barrett. "We added to submit a request for a capital equipment grant to the federal Department of Transportation," Barrett continued. "But the PVTA was in process of coming into existence and it was required that requests for any enabling legislation be processed throught their office," he added.

"We became part of the Transit Authority by being a provider of public bus service," Barrett said. "The PVTA reviewed and refined our application and referred it to the federal government," This request was approved in 1976.

Under this grant, the University received $4.3 million, which covered the cost of 26 new buses, the new bus garage facility currently under construction, service vehicles for road calls and other essential operation and set-up costs, Barrett said.

"Eighty percent of this capital equipment budget is provided by the federal government and the state and local agencies, including the Student Senate, split the cost of the remaining 20 percent," he said.

The Transit Service operating budget is funder through the PVTA, and is separate from the federal grant, he said.

"The anticipated operating budget for fiscal year '80 is $550,000. The federal government provides 50 percent of these costs, the local share is 35 percent, (85 percent of this amount is supplied by the Student Senate) and the state picks up the remaining 15 percent," he said.

The Transit Service also employs about 150 students, as bus drivers and in administrative capacities, Byam said. "The Transit Service carries three million people a year, at an average 18 cents cost per passenger," Byam said.

Golfers tee off

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

After two qualifying rounds at Hickory Ridge Country Club, UMass men's golf coach Ed Vlach has finally filled out his roster. Heading the list are senior Mark Duggan, junior Marty Hunt, and sophomore Bob Gladchuck, the only golfers returning from last spring's squad. With the loss of two fine golfers, Jim McDermott, and Vic Lahteine, it will be these three whom Vlach hopes will take over the leadership of the club.

Adding experience and depth to the Minutemen club is Holyoke Community College transfer student Tony Kelley, who Vlach praises as a great addition to the team.

Rounding out the roster of ten are Rich Goldstein, Joe Tamsey, Bob Robichaud, Steve Auerbach, and freshmen Steve Midttun, and Rich Murphy, along with alternates Brian Golden and Tom Schneider.

The Minutemen travel to Rutgers University today as they prepare themselves for the 36-hole Eastern Athletic Association Golf Championship which will be played tomorrow and Saturday on the Rutger's home course.

UMass will be competing against seven teams: Duquense, Georne Washington, Pittsburgh, Villanova, West Virginia, St. Bonaventure, and last years' winner Rutgers.

Making the trip to the Eastern's are Hunt, Duggan, Gladchuck, Kelley, Midttun, and Murphy. Coach Vlach feels that how well the team will finish will depend on how well his two freshmen play. For both, it will be their first collegiate tourney. Vlach added "I have high hopes in our team, despite losing Jim and Vic we have four strong experienced golfers and some talented first-year players."

After the Eastern Athletic Tournament the Minutemen will have little time to rest. Sunday is a day off, but the club is back on the road Monday morning traveling to Stove, Mass. where they will compete in the Yankee Conference Championships at the Stowe Acres course.

UM spikers bow to powerful Warsaw team

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The Warsaw Academy team came to UMass last night and they took over the NOPE basketball courts. Both the men and women of this prestigious European squad practiced and played with the grace and ease of champions, a name they deserve after years of hard work and patience.

The Warsaw women decimated the women of UMass in straight sets, 15-2, 15-1, 15-2. The key was in the ferocious spiking the Polish possessed. Throughout the match, UMass was stymied by the superior setting and blocking of the Academy. However, UMass gave the 300 or so in the stands and around the volleyball backcourt something to cheer about occasionally, with instances of serving by Joyce Gresl, spiking by Brenda Simmons, and setting by Ellen Braun. In a word, Warsaw was overwhelming; they exhibited their skills with picture-perfect discipline and finesse.

Warsaw coach Krystyna Wlecial, speaking through an interpreter, said, "UMass is a young and fresh team; you can't help but notice their ambition and involvement in the sport. The Polish team does have more experience; we have a more profound way of playing volleyball. I guess the main difference between UMass and ourselves was our age difference (many of the Warsaw players are in their early twenties, with the oldest being 28), and our experience. I think a team like UMass will grow; volleyball in general has gotten a green light as far as its future is concerned. Volleyball will be the international game of the future."

The UMass men had no better luck from the Warsaw's men's team as the UMass women. The Polish surged to a three-game sweep, 15-2, 15-0, 15-2. The UMass men, coached by Al Moral, gave the Warsaw team some moments of apprehension, as they managed to at least stall the Polish machine with miraculous digs, sets, and bumps. Despite this crowd-pleasing show of power, Warsaw showed even more, proving their expertise in the sport. After the first game, UMass' passing deteriorated, as Warsaw pounded spike after spike for easy points.

Despite the crushing loss, coach Al Morel was pleased wth the team's performance. "UMass played up to potential," he said, "we're playing against world-class players. Our defense, despite the score, was world-class. Orlando Larracuente, Pat Ryan, and Ed Midura really played fantastically. I am very happy with the way we play; it'll give us the inspiration to go for the New England Championship this year.

Throughout the matches, both the Polish and UMass exchanged their respect for each other. The UMass men and women, including women's coach Elaine Marasco and men's coach Al Morel, exchanged gifts of T-shirts commemorating the event for the Warsaw gifts of Polish-made silk kerchiefs before the matches. Afterwards came the customary handshake; though they could not understand each other, their words of 'Good game' could somehow be translated without an interpreter.

This game marked the opening of the season for the UMass women. Despite the loss, the team looked liked a team; they have practiced all through the past week and a half, with double sessions and scrimmages over last weekend. All through the match, the women utilized the special skills learned in NOPE—blocking, setting, spiking—for the arriving Academy team. The score does not reflect their determination.

UMass and coach Elaine Marasco will travel to Kingston, Rhode Island, for the URI Tournament on Saturday afternoon.

The men's team, meanwhile, are idle until February as far as playing in the regular season is concerned. After this match against Warsaw, this world-class team according to Al Morel, the team will hold tryouts for replenishing the squad Sunday at NOPE.

Yaz's dream becomes real as Sox win

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Carl Yastrzemski of the Boston Red Sox lashed a two-out single in the eighth inning of last night's game with the New York Yankees to become the first American League baseball player to get 3,000 hits and 400 home runs in his career.

Yastrzemski's sharp groundball hit to right field off Jim Beattie made him the 15th major leaguer to reach the 3,000-hit mark and only the fourth big leaguer to join the 3,000-hit, 400-homer club. The others are all Hall of Famers from the National League — Hank Aaron, Willie Mays and Stan Musial.

Yastrzemski collected his 2,999th hit with a single in his last trip to the plate in Sunday's 16-4 loss to Baltimore.

Yastrzemski hit the first pitch on the ground past second baseman Willie Randolph as a mob of Red Sox teammates flooded onto the field to congratulate him. The hit broke a string of 10 consecutive failures, including two walks, to get the 3,000th as Yastrzemski became only the second American Leaguer — including Al Kaline — to reach the plateau since 1925.

Right fielder Reggie Jackson brought the ball in from the field to Yastrzemski at first base and the Yankees, led by Manager Billy Martin, came out of the dugout to offer their congratulations.

As microphones were brought on the field for a post-hit ceremony, Yaz could seen sighing audibly.

Yastrzemski had only one previous hit — a single — in his previous 18 times at bat and his average had dipped to .266.

Prior to the historic hit last night, Yaz had walked, flied deep to right field and grounded to first against Catfish Hunter and grounded out to second against Beattie.

Yastrzemski was presented with a trophy from the Red Sox in ceremonies near the firstbase coaching box at Fenway Park as his father, Carl Yastrzemski Sr., and son, Mike, stood near by.

Bob Holbrook, secretary of the American League, congratulated Yastrzemski on behalf of baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

A crowd of 34,337 chanted, "We want Yaz," and he said: "I know one thing — the last hit was the hardest of all 3,000.

"It took so long," he joked, "because I really enjoyed all those standing ovations you've given me the last couple of days."

Yastrzemski thanked his teammates, Manager Don Zimmer and family along with the Red Sox hierarchy as dozens of photographers crowded around the microphone that had been quickly rushed out onto the field.

Hit No. 3,000 actually tied Yastrzemski with the late Roberto Clemente on the all-time list in Yaz' 2,850th game of his 19-year major league career. The big hit came on his 10,418th at-bat.

The hit off Beattie went just under Randolph's glove. Earlier, Yastzremski had hit the ball hard on the long fly caught by Jackson near the Red Sox bullpen and the two grounders fielded by first baseman Chris Chambliss and Randolph.

Jim Dwyer ran for Yastzresmki at first base after ceremonies lasted about 15 minutes.

Chuck Rainey pitched a six-hitter as the Boston Red Sox beat the New York Yankees 9-2.

For the love of money

Sometime between now and September 26, UMass and the ECAC will part ways, in disagreement over a television pact signed by the school's basketball team with the Eastern Eight, the league the team plays in. The TV agreement is in direct violation of ECAC rules which prohibit a telecast by a league member opposite an ECAC telecast.

In a conversation held with ECAC commissioner Scotty Whitelaw, he indicated that UMass as a whole, rather than the basketball team in particular, is being punished due to the severity of the UMass violation; that the University willfully signed the TV contract fully knowing that it was against ECAC rules to do so.

On the 26 of the month, the ECAC by vote of the general membership will expel UMass from the conference, although it has been strongly rumored that UMass will resign from the ECAC rather than face the embarassment of being kicked out.

What must be considered are the advantages and disadvantages UMass will derive from its separation with the ECAC.

As far as advantages go, first and foremost is the television money UMass will receive as part of the Eastern Eight television pact. This additional money becomes even more important now that Title IX is being revised to include per capita spending (equal spending for men and women). The added revenue will help the somewhat financially strapped UMass athletic department contend with the new ruling.

Also at an advantage is the recognition that UMass will receive via television. The Minutemen have not been on network television since they were known as the Redmen. I find it appalling that the ECAC did not telecast a single game while Julius Erving was enrolled.

With regards to financial considerations, UMass will get to keep all the money it receives as a result of television appearances and not have to give the ECAC the customary 6 percent it is entitled to from league members.

Now the disadvantages. The lesser of all the evils derived from leaving the ECAC is that UMass must now find other sources to supply its game officials previously supplied by the ECAC.

Men's tennis, soccer, track, swimming, and baseball will no longer be allowed to compete in either the ECAC, IC4A, or New England championships held annually in the sports thus rendering the chances of making the playoffs unimaginable.

But what must be considered as the most damaging effect of the ECAC departure is the effect it will have on the UMass athletic program as a whole and the student athlete in particular.

As far as recruiting goes, what top flight high school baseball player, runner, swimmer, or soccer player would come to a university which has little hope for a playoff berth. And for the athletes who are currently on campus, who must now play entirely for the sake of the game itself rather than the material awards that go with it, should not they have been considered before the television pact was signed and the inevitable fate of UMass athletics brought forth?

It appears to be a case of the almighty dollar dangling its bait and UMass going for it like a hungry fish, not recognizing that it is getting itself trapped in a situation it cannot win no matter what.

DVP might cancel Fonda-Hayden event

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Cancellation of the Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden campus appearance may be announced today because a clause in the sponsoring-group's bylaws prohibits admission fees, Distinguished Visitor's Program officials said last night.

Program Chairman and Vice-Chairman Joel Weissman and Howard Goldman said the appearance hinges upon approval by the Undergraduate Student Senate to waylay the bylaw.

Without student admission fees, the Sept. 30th program will be too costly, the spokesmen said at a DVP committee meeting last night.

Program costs, including fee, security, travel and promotion expenses are estimated at $7,000 by committee members.

"It's a difficult question we are facing," said Weissman. "This is probably the best program we could make. There is a lot of interest in the community...but we are faced with the possibility of swallowing a $7,000 program," he said.

For the group to charge admission fees, now set at $1, the senate must waive the bylaw of the group's constitution. The senate may only vote on the motion one week after presentation on the floor, Weissman said.

The group had planned to make the proposal at Wednesday's senate meeting, but because the senate lacked a quarum the group was unable to make its presentation, Weissman said.

He said if the Senate votes to adjust the bylaw in this case, $4,200 or the $7,000 total cost will be covered by ticket revenues. One dollar tickets would be sold to a Curry Hicks Cage capacity crowd of 4,200, he said. The program would cover the remaining $2,800.

However there is also a time element to be considered, he said.

"The earliest possible date to begin selling tickets, if everything goes well," he said, "is the 25 of September. That leaves five days to sell 4,200 tickets."

"We don't want to blow the program's semester funding in one shot," he said.

The program has a $26,000 annual budget, financed by a $1.50 per student yearly fee.

It contributes $5,000 yearly to Martin Luther King Week and $4,000 to $5,000 yearly to International Women's Week. The remaining $16,000 is split between two semesters for any specially scheduled program speakers.

"I think the consensus on campus is very positive," said Goldman.

"However, the less days we have to prepare, the more com-

Demonstrators rally for Seta

By MICHAEL SUSSMAN
Collegian Staff

About 90 demonstrators took part in a rally yesterday in front of the Northampton court house to protest the closing of an investigation into the death one year ago of Seta T. Rampersad.

Later, 50 some demonstrators held a vigil late last night at the Captain's Table restaurant in Northampton, where Seta, a former UMass student, was a waitress.

Rampersad was found dead on September 13 last year in a motel room in South Deerfield. Later investigation disclosed that her death occurred after an all night party with three companions in the room.

Hampshire-Franklin County District Attorney Tom Simons closed the case last December, after a court inquest could not determine the cause of death.

Suma Bohm , a member of UMass based Committee Against Repression and the Third World Women's Task Force, announced at the raliy the case will be brought to civil court by the two groups.

The noon rally, sponsored by the Committee and task Force, was held "in memory of Seta and to draw public attention to the fact that the case is not resolved," said Ellie Begli, a member of both groups.

Begli said the Committee Against Repression was formed last spring "to seek justice in Seta's case."

The protesters heard a speech by Bohm after marching up and down Main Street in Northampton with a mock coffin.

Speaking of racism in the judicial system and citing several cases which involved local Third World people, Bohm said, "Justice only exists if we make it exist.

"We are symbolically opening the coffin and bringing Seta out," Bohm said.

Bohm said the Committee and Task Force have been involved in a letter writing campaign to State Attorney General Francis X. Belotti since the case was closed. She also said a 6000 name petition was sent to him this summer with a request to re-examine the case, but Bellotti has not answered.

Bellotti was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Bohm said enough money had been donated to the group to hire a lawyer who will bring the case to civil court. She said the National Conference of Black Lawyers has agreed to represent them.

According to Gerri Hynes, a lawyer and member of the Conference, the group is planning to bring a civil suit for negligence against the three poeple who spent the night with Seta.

"From what I've read of the case, the behavior of the three people with Seta was essentially criminal," Hynes said.

Hynes also said a telegram sent by the Conference to Bellotti asking him to intervene in the case has not been answered.

The Rampersad case, which has received much public and press attention, began after police termed her death "suspicious." The then District Attorney John Callahan ordered an inquest to determine the cause of the death of the 20-year-old native of Trinidad.

The report by Simons after the inquest stated that "her death was not caused by the unlawful acts of any individual and further was not caused by negligence of any individual."

According to the report, testimony showed Rampersad had gone to Motel 6 in South Deerfield with Demetrious Konstantinouse a local restaurant owner, Brian Pitor and Carol Newson. Between 3:30 a.m. and 7:30 a.m., Rampersad had three epileptic

Firm recycles toxic chemical

SPRINGFIELD (AP) – New chemical waste disposal laws, together with the laws of economics, have nudged a large Springfield chemical firm into recycling the bad boy of groundwater contamination – the chemical cleaner trichloroethylene.

Hampden Color & Chemical Co. has begun to buy back used trichloroethylene and related "chlorinated solvents" that it sells to manufacturers in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

New methods and equipment let Hampden clean, rejuvenate and resell the widely-used industrial cleaning agent, an estimated five million pounds of which is used annually in the Northeast.

Until now, the hazardous chemical has been largely disposed of after first use.

Neo-Nazis sentenced

BUECKEBURG, West Germany (AP) – A West German judge sentenced six neo-Nazis Thursday to prison terms of four to 11 years on charges they organized or participated in right-wing criminal activity planned by their American leader.

The prison sentences followed the first major trial of neoNazis in this country and came after a government report warned that such groups were adopting terrorist tactics in an effort to overthrow democracy.

After a four-month trial, the court concluded that the six men followed the orders of selfstyled U.S. Nazi leader Gary Rex Lauck, of Lincoln, Neb. Lauck, 25, classified by the federal prosecutor's office as "persona non grata" in West Germany, was given a safe conduct pass and immunity so he could enter the country and testify for the defense.

Volcano death toll climbs

CATANIA, Sicily (AP) – The death toll in Mount Etna's first fatal eruption this century climbed to nine Thursday and rescue workers feared more bodies might still be buried under "rocks as big as houses" near the volcano's summit.

Three badly dismembered bodies were found near the main crater Thursday. Six other bodies had been recovered after the volcanic explosion Wednesday. All the victims were Italians.

Surgeons, meanwhile, performed amputations on almost a dozen injured survivors. A total of more than two dozen persons were injured, including tourists from Britain, Spain and Switzerland, but no Americans. At least four were reported in critical condition following emergency surgery.

'Scared Straight' sued

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) - "Scared Straight," the Emmy Award-winning documentary about a prison program to discourage youngsters from crime, has resulted in a $10 million lawsuit charging that the film's producers misled juveniles in to participating.

Maurice Frager, a Jersey City attorney representing nine children who took part in the documentary and their parents, filed the suit Wednesday against producer Arnold Shapiro.

The film depicted a session of the Lifers Group of Rahway State Prison in which the youngsters, all of whom had minor brushes with the law, were berated by inmates serving life terms in prison.

B&M trains roll again

BOSTON (AP) – A wildcat strike that tied up commuters and freight on the Boston Maine Railroad was settled yesterday, and the B&M began restoring passenger service.

Details of the settlement were not immediately known, but the agreement apparently was reached at a morning conference involving lawyers from both sides and United States District Judge Rya Zobel.

"We're just happy that it's ended," said Gloria Stone, B&M spokesperson. She said she had not seen the details of the settlement.

Frederic destroys

By GARRY MITCHELL
Associated Press

MOBILE, Ala. – Hurricane Frederic pushed inland yesterday after cutting a 100- mile-wide swath through the scenic Gulf Coast, leaving behind a rubble of splintered dwellings, boats and businesses and at least two people dead.

Some of the more than 400,000 people who had fled before the hurricane moved ashore late Wednesday picked their way back home only to find their houses in shambles. Thousands of others remained in emergency shelters.

President Carter designated 30 counties in Mississippi, Florida and Alabama as major disaster areas, making them eligible for federal aid, and the White House said Carter will personally inspect the area by helicopter today.

Looting broke out in Mobile and suburban Prichard as Frederic howled northward through southeast Mississippi and into Alabama yesterday afternoon, and the National Guard was called out to aid police.

Though weakening, the storm was still dumping heavy rains and packing winds up to 60 mph, strong enough to knock down power lines as far north as Birmingham, Ala.

At 3 p.m. EDT Frederic, downgraded to a tropical storm, was centered just north northwest of Tuscaloosa, Ala., and moving just east of due north at 15 mph. It was expected to turn more to the northeast later in the day. Forecasters said there was a threat of tornados in northern and eastern Alabama and western Georgia.

In this historic port city, 100 mph winds uprooted giant oaks, smashed downtown storefronts and pitched the debris into the narrow streets and stately boulevards. Officials said damage costs would certainly mount into the millions of dollars, but would not offer estimates.

Pascagoula, Miss., a shipbuilding city of about 28,000 residents 30 miles to the west appeared the hardest hit.

"I would say there is not a dwelling, business or any other building in Jackson County that does not have damage ranging from minor to total destruction," said Ken Phillips, director of disaster relief in Pascagoula.

Jon Ham, an aide to Alabama Gov. Fob James, flew over the resort area of Gulf Shores and reported that "very few houses remain standing."

Florida Gov. Bob Graham estimated that damage in the Florida Panhandle area between Panama City and Pensacola would exceed the $95 million in wreckage left by Hurricane David on the East Coast two weeks ago. Mississippi Gov. Cliff Finch put the damage in his state at more than $50 million.

Officials credited the low number of casualities to the fact that hundreds of thousands oe people heeded the call to evacuate. In 1969, more than 250 people died when Hurricane Camille stormed ashore near Gulfport, Miss.

Many of those who fled to high ground were not immediately able to return to their homes. Officials said new shelters would be set up by Thursday night.

Smog keeps people indoors in L.A. area

By JAY ARNOLD
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES – Prompted by the worst smog in 25 years, officials canceled or sharply cut back outdoor activities for schoolchildren and warned adults to stay inside yesterday as Southern Californians choked and weeped under a dirty yellow sky.

Air quality officials issued "hazardous" air warnings for six areas – the first time this has ever been done – and Friday's pollution was expected to be even worse.

Also for the first time in history, the Air Quality Management District asked all businesses, regardless of the number of employees, to begin voluntary car pooling.

Aggravating the eye-stinging, stale-smelling haze was a raging brush fire near Mount Wilson north of the city, which sent clouds of brown smoke and soot over the entire area.

TOC stickers needed even for 20-year-olds

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

Students without TOC stickers have been asking strangers with stickers if they can enter the Blue Wall and Top of the Campus Center Bar as their "guests."

Campus Center officials say even if a student has proof that they are of legal drinking age they must have a TOC sticker or be the guest of someone who has a TOC sticker.

The reason for this rule is the TOC and Blue Wall have what is known as a club liquor license which means they can only serve liquor to members of the club. Hence the reason students must have a TOC sticker.

This does not exclude people from eating at the TOC restaurant but it does mean only UMass students with a valid TOC sticker and their limit of three guests may be served liquor in the TOC or Blue Wall. Since the 20 and over drinking age went into effect last semester half of the Blue Wall has been designated a 'juice' bar where anyone under age 20 may be admitted without a TOC sticker and savor coke or other non-alcoholic beverages.

A student must also have a positive proof of age, such as a driver's license with a picture, or a Massachusetts Liquor Identification Card.

"In order to be served in the Blue Wall or TOC one must be of legal drinking age and also they must be a TOC member or a guest of a member," said Bernard F. Wilkes Jr., assistant director of the Campus Center.

Students can purchase TOC stickers for 50 cents at the assistance desk in the Campus Center during the day or at the TOC during the night. They must present positive proof of identification.

This money plus the money from the sale of liquor goes into the Campus Center food service account. William M. Haris, Campus Center director, estimates there are probably between 6,000 and 7,000 TOC members.

The TOC was opened in 1970-1971 when the Campus Center was first opened.

"In order to be served at the Blue Wall or TOC one must be of legal drinking age and must be a TOC member,"—

Student craft shop opens

By JENNY YODER
Collegian Staff

"People ought to get started on their Christmas presents now," suggests Penny Worman, supervisor and instructor at the UMass Craft Shop located across from the Hatch cafeteria, in the Student Union Building.

Free instruction at the shop is offered by skilled craftspersons in a variety of areas including batik, pottery, stained glass, leather, silk screen, jewelry, lapidary (stone cutting and polishing), woodworking and photography. Worman said provisions for brass etching, basketry and pewter work were made available this year as well.

The Craft Shop, which is subsidized by the student-paid Campus Center fee, is the only university craft center in the United States that provides free individual instruction and free use of tools, Worman said. The shop is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 12 noon to 4 p.m. on Saturday. During these times students are encouraged to come and go as they please – an informal atmosphere in the craft shop enables students to work at their own pace. Worman said, "No classes are offered, because instruction is available at all times."

Although the Craft Shop is a Recognized Student Organization group, it is not run entirely by students. Besides Worman, there are seven instructors - four undergraduate students, two non-students, and one graduate student. This is the nineth year the shop has been in existence.

Between 30 and 40 students are using the shop each week, Worman said. She said she expects between 200 and 300 students a day beginning after Thanksgiving when people start a mad dash to make presents before Christmas. Because of Christmas time competition, Worman said students should take advantage of the shop now. In approximately one month the shop will be open in the evenings, she said, and will be open even longer hours during December.

Greeks plan homecoming

By MARK L. CURELOP

A UMass homecoming, complete with a parade and floats, is being planned by the Inter-fraternity Council and has been scheduled for October 19 through 21.

Brad Ringquist, council president, said each campus fraternity and sorority house is sponsoring a parade float and that any Recognized Student Organization can sponsor one as well. Float applications are available from the Greek Affairs office in Berkshire House.

Also, an annual Greek Plant Sale has been scheduled for October 16 and 17 in the Student Union Ballroom.

At a council meeting held Wednesday night, Dana Cohen, from PIKE fraternity, spoke to members about a Multiple Sclerosis Dance Marathon scheduled for October 12, 13 and 14 in the Student Union Ballroom. Cohen said prizes, supplied by MS, will be awarded to the winners.

Brian Burke, Co-President of the Student Government Assoication and member of PIKE Fraternity, spoke on a proposal to exempt all Greek Houses from paying property taxes to the town of Amherst. Burke said the Greek system, could save $126,000 a year on property taxes if exempt.

The Greek houses are non-profit organizations, said Burke.

Students agree: campus too dark

By DONNA SULLIVAN

Better lighting is the way to solve the problem of violence against women, according to most UMass students. More lights in dark areas frequented by women, coupled with more campus police foot patrols, could help decrease the number of women sexually harrassed and assaulted, students interviewed recently by the Collegian, said.

"There should be more lighting especially in Orchard Hill and the upper areas of campus," said Carl Wiley, a sophomore, living in the Sylvan Residential Area.

According to Bob Reniszewski, a senior living off-campus, women are not adequately protected at night on the UMass campus. "There should be more police officers, proper lighting and people traveling in groups of two," he said.

Eric Ahola

More than two-thirds of the 48 students interviewed felt that women are not sufficiently protected while walking around a dark UMass campus.

But while some UMass women refuse to venture out alone at night, and even make a point of traveling in groups of at least two, there are those who do feel safe.

"Women are adequately protected," said Michelle Harpin, a freshman and resident of Southwest. She continued, "I've been walking around alone at night a lot and I've been doing fine."

Students feel that a woman should take it upon herself to secure her own safety. They said a woman's being aware of the possibility of sexual assault might compel her to make a point of going out at night in groups.

According to Sarir Khamsi, a sophomore living in the Orchard Hill Residential Area, and Eric Ahola, a freshman residing in Sylvan, women should walk and dress so as not to encourage a potential assailant.

Sarir Khamsi

"If they're dressed a certain way they're asking for it," said Ahola. "Some people can't restrain themselves," he said.

"Walking has a lot to do with it, and dressing," said Khamsi.

The results of the recent interviews coincide with a survey taken last year and sponsored by the Everywomen's Center. This survey stated that "84 percent of those interviewed said additional lighting was needed on campus, and 70 percent wanted better police.

The UMass Committee to Study Violence Against Women made several proposals to the University in June 1979, including that better lighting be installed on campus in high risk areas. According to police and physical plant officials few have been executed due to lack of funding. The University's doing nothing "sounds typical of most things that go on at UMass," said Tina Hudson of the Everywomen's Center. "Yet they investigated the library in 1976."

According to the Center survey, 86 percent of the on-campus attacks occurred in co-ed dorms and academic buildings such as the campus center, library, and greenhouses.

Of the students recently questioned, less than 20 percent knew that most physical attacks occur inside. Most believed in the myth that most rapes occur outside in a dark secluded area.

Stronger security was an often repeated solution given by students to the problem of sexual attacks inside dorms and academic building.

"They should increase security," Wiley said, "it's hard to get into my dorm but you can get into some any time of the night or day."

Irene Ho

Irene Ho, a freshman living in the Northeast Residential area, said of academic buildings, "there should be one or two safety guards walking around outside, or standing in front of each building."

"Keep the buildings locked up," Reniszewski said "I like to study in Machmer because there's nobody there at night, but there's nobody to assist a woman if she needed help."

Along with the myth of a strange man's jumping out of the bushes, is one that claims that a woman out alone at night is "asking to be raped," said Susan Karz of the Everywoman's Center. She said, "many people say, 'well what are you doing alone at night if you don't want that to happen."

The number of those who believe in this myth seem to be declining, though more than 83 percent of the students questioned said emphatically, 'no, women are not asking for it if they go out alone at night.'

Kris Perry

"No one is asking for it," said Kris Perry a commuting freshman. "Are guys asking for it at night? Just because you're out doesn't mean you're asking for it. It doesn't make sense."

"I don't think the woman is consciously out of get battered or raped," Reniszewski said. "They just don't think it could happen to them."

Those questioned agreed most unanimously that women and men should be more aware of the situation of sexual assault on campus and said some measures, such as better lighting, more police patrols, escort services, and more, should be taken.

New third world students talk about UMass

Meet Mona Smith, a Spanish major from Springfield.

Q. Where do you live and how do you like your residential area? A. I live in Butterfield dorm. At first I was a bit upset because it wasn't the area that I had chosen. However I have found that Butterfield is quiet and good for studying. It's got its own kitchen and other facilities. Activities there are also quite good.

Q. What are your impressions of UMass? A. Size has not posed a problem yet but I do anticipate a few problems in the winter time as far as the hill is concerned. I have found CCEBS to be very helpful as far as choosing courses and other academic problems are concerned.I also think that UMass offers a good program for my major.

Q. What were your expectations on arriving on campus? A. I expected to be a lot more confused but things have gone well so far.

Q. What do you hope to accomplish here at UMass? A. I hope to get a good education and further studies in foreign communications.

Q. Have you had any difficult encounters so far? A. Just with the administration—my Housing and Financial Aid were messed up and I'm still having some problems with them.

Q. What are your thoughts about the reception? A. It's a good idea. It is also important for bringing together the Third World students spread out all over the campus.

Meet Alexander Murkison, a Business Major from Lynn.

Q. Where do you live and how do you like your residential area? A. I live in Grayson. It's quiet compared to some of the other areas and the people are sociable. The area is secluded, it has a kitchen and good facilities. The scenery is also good.

Q. What are your impressions of UMass? A. It's bit but I like it. The size is actually an advantage. There is a lot of space and it gives you a lot of freedom and places to relax between classes. I think that CCEBS is very informative. It was a big help in choosing courses and for advice.

Q. What were your expectations on arriving on campus? A. I was looking for some kind of independence and looking forward to making a lot of new friends. I'm satisfied so far.

Q. What do you hope to accomplish here at UMass? A. I wanna get a degree and probably start an accounting firm of my own.

Q. What are your thoughts about the reception? A. It's a good way of bringing new people together.

The first annual reception of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students was held on the 10th floor of the Campus Center this past Wednesday night.

"The idea is to create a social form for students, faculty and staff from across campus to come together and interact" said program director, Carol Carter. "It gives first year students the opportunity also to meet upperclass students and to meet those faculty and staff in various departments and to recognize names and faces," she said.

The class of 1984 which numbers 113 was introduced to various CCEBS board members, faculty and advisors. One of the goals of the program this year is to make a rigorous attempt to recruit new students. The evening concluded with a slide presentation, refreshments and social interaction.

Quiet Patricia Harris?

The following is a reprint editorial from The Boston Globe.

Listening to Patricia Harris pacify two Senate committees and, at the same time, mollify the White House loyalty testers reveals a woman who has both an instinct for self-preservation and a sense of how to consolidate her own power in a hostile setting.

Harris, who in early August will switch from Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development to Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, shocked a lot of Washington seers by surviving last week's Cabinet purge at all. The conventional Capital wisdom was that the 55-year-old black lawyer, who has been around since the Administration of Lyndon Johnson, was not a very effective administrator.

The speculation now, particularly among black political observers in Washington, is that Harris saved her skin by privately telling Carter some home truths about his shakiness among minorities and liberals. Instead of firing her, President Carter handed her the government's biggest agency, a labyrinthine bureaucracy that spends about $200 billion US tax dollars annually. In passing her the torch he snatched from Joseph Califano, Carter has been effusive about what a wonderfully loyal team player she is.

In her testimony before the Senate Finance and the Labor and Human Resources committees, Mrs. Harris downplayed her disagreement with Carter about Medicaid funding of abortions, which she favors. And she won the unanimous approval of the Finance Committee after she assured them that she fully intended to carry on Califano's social programs, including the anti-smoking campaign and efforts to accelerate the racial integration of North Carolina colleges and universities.

If the White House team leaders were listening closely, though, one of her statements should have given them pause. She said she was perfectly willing to be a good team player and confine her disagreements to the privacy of the Oval Office, then march in lockstep with the rest of the troops after Carter makes a decision—unless she disagrees with Carter over a matter of principle.

Should that occur, said Harris, she is prepared to resign.

That, of course, is exactly what the President himself has suggested for members of his team who can't come to terms with his policies.

There is a difference with Harris, though. She is black, a woman, a Washington insider, a civil-rights activist with strong ties to the NAACP and the Urban League and supportive relationships with all of the most influential black politicians, academicians, business people and journalists. If she defected, the repercussions among minorities and liberals would be devastating to Carter. That is going to give Secretary Harris considerably increased clout in the Carter Administration, far more than UN Ambassador Andrew Young has.

Giving up her ability to disagree with Carter publicly was no sacrifice at all. Patricia Harris won't need a public forum to apply pressure to Carter on domestic policy. He will be more than anxious to make sure she has no reason to jump ship.

Freshmen Register remains unpublished

The 1979 version of the Freshmen Register will not be published due to bureaucratic hassles between Alpha Phi Omega, the publication's sponsor, and Dean of Students William Field's office.

The Register, which has not been published in two years, lists the incoming university freshmen, accompanied by a picture and some backgroung information.

Rick Goldstein, who chairs the register committee of the service fraternity said problems surrounding the publication go back a few years. He said, "Two years ago, the administration was against the idea of a register because they felt the publication of the names of the students would attract mail-order companies and other organizations." Goldstien said this might be considered an invasion of privacy, which is a punishable offense by law.

Goldstein said he hopes to have the register published in 1980 at a reduced rate. The register originally cost the students $7, but Goldstein hopes that price can be sliced to $2.

seizures. After trying to give her a cold shower and stick a spoon and then a wallet in her mouth, Newton and Konstanlopulos left, leaving Pitzer alone with Rampersad. Around noon, Pitzer called a friend who worked in a hospital. On arrival the firend advised Pitzer to call an ambulance and then the two of them left the motel.

The ambulance attendents found Rampersad dead at 1:10 p.m.

Rampersad's family charged they saw bruises on her face whhen they viewed the body the day after her death. The autopsy report by a state medical examiner said there were "no bruises."

The Committee, in a letter to Simons in April named several prominent people in Northampton who they claimed had been at a party with Seta before her death. They also said they had received threatening phone calls. Simons, in a May 9 letter, refused to investigate, saying the events leading to Rampersad's death had already been determined.

Simons said last night he told the committee and task Force in a meeting last May that he and the state police "would be happy to have any further factual information on the case. But criminal justice works on fact and not on rumor."

Dorms may provide new study space

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Quiet hours and assigned study lounges seem to be the plan for acquiring studying space in place of the library which, when open, can accommodate 3,000 students at one time.

While quiet hours—designated hours for studying in the dormitories which are agreed upon by the residents—do not seem to be unanimously popular across campus, all dormitory heads of residence interviewed last night have designated study space and many are looking into creating additional spaces.

A television set was moved from the main lounge of Washington Lower dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area last week to a smaller room to provide more study space, Head of Residence Kirk Peters said.

"There's study space on every floor," Peters said of the seven floor dormitory, "and we're looking into having the lighting fixed."

Quiet hours in Gorman dormitory in the Central Residential Area were voted upon this week, Assistant Cluster Coordinator Steve Vining said last night. And most of the floors will be observing quiet hours from 7 to 11 p.m., Sunday through Friday.

A study lounge was added to each of the Sylvan Residential Area dormitories this summer, Cashin Head of Residence Daniel Fitzgibbons said. The lounge, formerly a set of suites, was established last semester after Sylvan residents protested the lack of public space in the dormitories, Fitzgibbons said.

Quiet hours will be discussed floor by floor, he said.

Nacy Maffuchi, an assistant head of resident in Cashin, said she did not think quiet hours would be approved by the floors. "We weren't too thrilled about that because we don't think we can regulate the dorm and have quiet hours," she said.

"We hope to make people more aware of respecting one another," she said.

Plans for computer terminals in the John Adams tower accompany plans for quiet hours, Tower Coordinator Paul Rannenberg said last night. Rooms on the lounge floors have been designated for study space he also said.

Adjusting can be rough

DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Making a transition is never easy, and for freshmen starting their first semester of college away from friends, the family, and the familiarity of high school – these first weeks can be traumatic.

At the outset of last semester a UMass freshman jumped to her death from the 21st floor of George Washington Tower. Two previous suicides last year involved students who were found hanged in their dormitory rooms in separate incidents.

Debbie Wallace

All of the students were freshman; two were women.

If the pressure of school is getting you depressed, your roomate seems to be dispicable, or you feel that one or more of your classes are a mistake, giving up may appear to be your solution. Instead, try to find a support system.

A friend, fellow worker, or the person next door, may enjoy someone to talk to, and you will begin building a group of people who act as supports for you in good times as well as bad.

If, however, you do not make friends easily, and you find yourself virtually alone among the 25,000 students who surround you, there are still alternatives.

Services are available to students who have paid their health fee at the UMass mental health center located in room 127 Hills North. The staff consists of psychiatrists, clinical psychologists, and psychiatric social workers who counsel seven percent of the UMass population each year.

The mental health center offers individual, group, and couples therapy.

I became increasingly concerned last we... when I heard a number of students speak about wanting to commit suicide.

Suicide is a cry for help!

People who threaten to end their lives are not always making idle threats.

We are constantly told "These are the best years of our lives." But if you can't bear the thought of eating at the dining commons alone, you feel set apart or share few interests with others in your dorm, or you miss the excitement of dorm life since you have moved off campus--these constant reminders that you should be having the time of your life may lead to further depression.

Knock on your neighbors door, keep in touch with old friends, and talk to people you meet around campus.

Professor 'should recognize' problem

To the Editor:

This letter was composed to dispute Mr. Lewis M. Killian's letter in the Collegian of September 12. This is not only to disagree personally with Mr. Killian's view but to show Mr. Killian's implication of the UMass community being, "a jungle full of self-seeking, power-hungry interest groups," as false.

I would be interested in knowing how the UMass community is trying to use this, "disaster to promote...(our)... own interests." What?

By trying to get action taken on a basic service which we paid for and one which is expected by the community to operate as it has in the past.

This "common problem" (how many universities are blessed with inoperable libraries?) has not been one in which we have searched for a specific scapegoat (the administration) but rather a problem which we are all deeply affected by and we desire to get corrected as soon as possible.

I do not mean by the inadequate replacement of but hoping that by our complaints action in the near future will be taken.

Mr. Killian, you as a professor should recognize this.

Gary R. Zahorsky

'Bible fortells coming of God, Mohammad'

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the article by Mr. Santis on page 9 of the September 10th issue of the Collegian, where he points out his beliefs about the Middle East tragedy, Judaism and Islam.

Mr. Santis tries to imply that prophet Mohammed (pbuh) is a single independent leader whose teachings and ideas are influenced by his conflicts with Jews. Whereas Mohammed is not an independent, "self-trained prophet", he is a messenger of God (by God is not meant Jesus. But the one whom Jesus is a messenger of.) Mohammed is the last of the group of eternal prophets starting with Abraham and including Noah, Moses, and Jesus.

The Bible foretells of the coming of the last messenger of God, Mohammed. And Mr. Santis can not simply sit at his desk and deny the prophecy of God's envoy, just like that!

The article depicts Islam as anti-Jewish culture and concludes that the Jews cannot live peacefully with the Moslems. Because Santis uses the Quran to show that, let me use the same book to prove that he has misinterpreted the point. The Quran repeatedly states that "all those who believe in the one and only God, follow his path, and are honest, virtuous, and devoted, are forgiven and blessed regardless of their religion and holy book.

A part of the Surah of "The Cow" about the Jews is quoted in that article. The 77th verse of the surah of "The Cow" clearly indicates that some (only some) of those Jews who interpret the Torah according to their own false desires are mistaken and condemned. . . . So it should be clear that Islam has nothing against the Jews who believe in God and follow his path.

Now for your information verses 83 and 84 are quoted from the same page: "Remember your promise that you will never kill a man and never exile anyone from his homeland." 83 - "But you turn around, kill, and exile the defenseless from his homeland. And, in oppressing the weak you support one another . . ." 84 - Quite an interesting biography of that specific group of Jews mentioned earlier (verse 77); namely the Zionists!

Isn't it?

It is very crucial to differentiate between the 19th century born "Zionism" and true "Judaism".

And finally those who believe Israel is a "Democratic Secular State" are referred to chapters 25 & 26 of the book by Norman F. Dacey called "The Golden Calf" and many other realisitic books and papers full of bitter facts and stastistics on that subject.

Saeid Minaei

Van Door-less; Dead were 'great'

To the Editor:

In reference to Mr. Schneier's letter on Van Morrison; first of all he must have followed Van Morrison's career extremely carefully, since he didn't even know that Morrison never even remotely had anything to do with the Doors.

Secondly, the Spring Concert was one of the greatest musical successes our campus has ever seen, with over 25,000 people in attendance. How anyone can knock such pioneers of American rock is beyond me.

If Schneier would like to hear more "Fourth World Alliance" music, maybe he should go back to his own planet.

Ted, Yaz play different games

Now that the Yaz watch is over there are plenty of similarly important spectacles to decry (or enjoy, depending on one's political and physical orientation). One could stand around watching for the library to crumble, (hard hats are available compliments of the Hancock Insurance Company).

A friend who has some surplus bricks has suggested "salting" the library area some night just to observe reactions the next day.

For those of more esoteric taste (political science fans) the impending presidential election will certainly add spice to those 9:05 classes. I suspect millions wait with bated breath (at least in New England) for every quotable Kennedy comment. The force of this man's opinions struck me while I was washing away the bitter taste of the Sox Friday night loss to Baltimore (Yaz 0-4) at a Brighton bar.

I was not too slowly sipping my nth gin and tonic at Molly's (a watering hole renowned for its 16 oz. refreshments) when a friend from the game burst into the bar and exclaimed that "Teddy was going to run and that he was on TV."

Of course the actual Kennedy statement was not quite that tone yet the conversation along the bar turned from the woes of being a Red Sox fan to the possibilities of a Kennedy running for the big P.

Too late to run. Too late to cry now

The time has come for us to say good-bye now

Mr. President have pity on the working man

Mr. President have pity on the working man

It would seem that the weather is fine for some first rate political bird watching.

Skylab gone, but sky still falling

The library is falling down. It seems unbelievable, but this kind of thing is nothing new, really.

An anonymous spokesman for the construction firm that built the structure was questioned as to how a thing like this could happen.

"Back in 1970, when we built the library, we had the technology to put it up, but not to keep it up. We figured that by the time it started falling down, we'd have the technology to know how to keep it up. However, in order to fund the necessary research and development to enable us to do that, we needed federal and state aid, and we just didn't get it," he replied.

The inquiry went further: "You mean you put the Library up knowing full well that you couldn't keep it up? Why did all this happen without the public's knowledge?"

The spokesman replied, "Sometimes the scientific community has a responsibility to the public not to tell them anything, in order that they don't worry unnecessarily."

Asked if the public now has a reason to worry, he replied, "No, if you stay about two miles away from the damn thing."

The spokesman couldn't state the exact date that the Library would fall, but he did say that his firm was closely monitoring the structure and would do all it could to predict approximately when the bricks would re-enter the earth's atmosphere.

He did say that the chances of getting hit by a falling piece of Library are a billion to one, but, he urged anyone going anywhere near it to wear a hard hat anyway, just in case.

He emphasized that his company was sensitive to the feelings and needs of the people of the University, and as a token of it's commitment to working with the people, would provide hard hats for a small fee to persons walking in the area.

Asked if a hard hat would be enough to deflect the force of a 6000 pound brick panel falling twenty-eight stories, he replied, "No comment."

Early this morning the Executive editor of the Collegian announced a contest being sponsored by the Collegian editorial page staff to guess the exact date and time the Library will fall. The location need not be included. Contestants should include the exact day, hour and minute they think the Library will fall.

The exact second should also be included for tie-breaking purposes.

Also, a local newspaper is offering a $10,000 reward for the first piece of Library to be presented, encased in lead, to the paper's office. And local insurance agencies are expected to announce shortly special policies, with student discount rates available, for possible victims.

In ending his prepared statement, the spokesman downplayed the danger of the situation and criticized the press for blowing the entire matter out of proportion.

"It's only a library, and it will be fixed in a couple of years," he said.

Jackson Katz is a Collegian guest columnist.

Debate team prepares for year of regional, international meets

By KIM KIRSCHNER
Collegian Staff

Towering above all of the structures around it stands an empty, silent, red building. This building is known as the UMass library.

Directly in the shadow of the library is a building in which certain students, though somewhat inconvenienced by the closing of the library, have managed to keep their special research flowing. This building is known as South College, home of the UMass Debate Union, and is far from empty. The students are tournament and public debaters, preparing for yet another active semester.

The first intercollegiate debate at UMass was in 1910 with Bates College as the opponent. Since then the debate team has represented UMass at tournaments all over the country. It has also participated in public debates in many and varied locations, including Washington, D.C., where team members debated on a radio show.

Members also appeared on a television show in Massachusetts which aired before 25,000 viewers. And one of their most exciting debates was held in a maximum security prison in Norfolk, Mass.

The public debates are part of the University Outreach Program. The teams appear before approximately 15,000 people a year, debating a variety of topics of public interest. This year they will debate four topics--the Regulation of Cults, the Reinstatement of the Draft, Competency Testing in Secondary Education, and Capital Punishment.

The tournament debaters will spend the year traveling to colleges all over the United States. This year their topic for debate is that the federal governemnt should significantly strengthen the regulation of mass media communication in the United States. This policy proposition calls for federal control over television, radio, print and/or film industries to be substantially increased. The team will travel to Bates College September 28 for the first tournament of the semester.

Aside from the public and tournament debate programs, three international debates will take place on campus this year. The first will pit the UMass debaters against a team from Great Britain on Tuesday, October 9. The topic will be on conservation as the solution to Americas energy problem. This debate will take place in Bartlett Auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

The second international debate will be here in February against a team from Japan. In April a team from the Soviet Union - complete with a KGB agent - will challenge the home team in the final debate of the year. The topic has yet to be determined.

The UMass Debate Union will also host a high school debate tournament this semester. On Novemeber 10 and 11, about 550 high school debaters and their coaches will descend on UMass from all over the United States. The topic for this tournament will consider that the United States should significantly change its foreign trade policies.

The UMass Debate Union is composed of 45 undergraduate students; two graduate debate coaches, Nicholas Burnett and David Snowball; and a director, Gary Eckles. According to Gary Eckles, students interested in developing critical thinking and communication skills can apply for Debate Union membership anytime during the coming year.

Cancer from gene mixup

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — The discovery that a scrambled chromosome causes cancer may be the first step in the development of tests that will allow doctors to spot the seeds of this disease in the unborn, scientists say.

At Beth Israel Hospital in Boston, doctors discovered that a specific, inherited mixup in genetic material was causing one family to have an unusually high incidence of kidney cancer.

Doctors have known that some — and possibly all — kinds of cancer can be inherited. But this is the first time that they have ever been able to find the exact genetic mistake that allows the disease to pass from parent to child.

In this case, the doctors are able to use a test called amniocentesis to disclose before birth which offspring of the family are likely to grow up to have kidney cancer.

The research, headed by Dr. Robert S. Brown, was published in yesterday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Inheritance of kidney cancer is rare, and Brown said the genetic accident they discovered may affect only one family. However, the possibility exists that doctors may someday be able to use similar techniques to find the seeds of other kinds of cancer in the unborn.

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. Afred G. Knudson Jr. of Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia wrote: "If it is true that there are 100 or so cancers and that each occurs in both hereditary and nonheriditary form, then genetic studies of those rare families with inherited cancers could ultimately lead to a catalogue of the 100 or so cancer genes in men. Theoretically, all persons at high genetic risk of cancer could be identified, even in fetal life."

Soviets support leftists

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The leftist regime in Afghanistan has become increasingly dependent on Soviet support in the face of a mounting guerrilla war and a surfacing rift within President Nur Mohammed Taraki's ruling Khalq (People's) Party, Afghan and diplomatic sources say.

One Asian diplomat went so far as to say that the question is no longer whether Taraki's 17-month-old regime stands or falls "but whether Afghanistan is going to remain viably independent."

Soviet involvement is visible, keenly felt and apparently here to stay, the sources said. Aside from the arrival of helicopter gunships and other war material, the diplomats reported that an estimated 4,500 Soviet advisers have moved into key government departments.

The sources said that veteran Soviet diplomat Vassily Safronchuk is now a full-time adviser to Taraki and Prime Minister Hafizullah Amin.

plicated it gets," he said.

Controversy over program planning, funding and speaker choice Wednesday night was voiced before the Senate by four Viet Nam veterans. The veterans said they opposed Fonda and Hayden politically and were given no advance notice of the event.

Veteran Paul Withers reportedly said about 100 veterans will storm Curry Hicks Cage the night the two are scheduled to appear and "question Fonda off her ass."

"They're going to do what they should do," Weissman said last night. "Get up and ask some very hard and pointed questions. That's one of the good things about the program."

Goldman also said, "controversy never hurts in discussing a problem."

Final decision on whether to go forward with the program will be made early today, they said.

The Fonda-Hayden speeches would be part of their nationwide "barnstorming" tour to run from September 23 to October 25. The tour will include a dozen key presidential primary states and serve to advocate issues of the Hayden-founded Campaign for Economic Development.

Characterized by tax activist Howard Jarvis as "just a bunch of socialists," the CED in a published report denied charges that the road show is being made to benefit political aspirations of Governor Jerry Brown

Hayden reportedly said, "We need a dramatic, innovative view of where America should be going in the '80s. This is a critical period and we hope to trigger a nationwide debate similar to the popular debates that surrounded slavery in the 19th century and the causes of the Depression in the 1930s."

Dr. defends nuke power

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press

HERSHEY, Pa. – Dr. Norman Rasmussen, author of a report that served for a time as a standard on atomic safety, defended the nuclear power option yesterday despite the risks highlighted by the Three Mile Island accident.

"If we wait for a no-risk solution to the energy problem, I suggest we'll get no solution at all, and that, in the end, could be the biggest mistake," said Rasmussen, head of nuclear energy studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Rasmussen spoke at a conference on radiation and health held here, 10 miles from the site of the worst commercial nuclear accident in U.S. history. The conference was sponsored by Penn State University.

He acknowledged that nuclear power involves risk of injury, early fatality, latent cancers, genetic defects and other disease but added: "I have concluded the risks are small compared to many other risks we accept in our society."

"If the aircraft industry was based on the possibility of a plane crashing into Yankee Stadium, it wouldn't exist," Rasmussen said.

He also predicted the March 28 accident would yield benefits, including "a real shakeup" of the nuclear industry and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. "TMI will have a net positive impact on the safety of reactors if it's negative impact doesn't wipe out the option all together," he said.

"It reduced the air of complacency among utility operators. They're all now shaken. They understand that attention to the details of safety is vitally important to protect their investment and the public health," Rasmussen said.

Carter keeps slipping in public's eye

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Americans now give President Carter the lowest job rating of any president in nearly three decades, as their unhappiness with his handling of the economy and foreign affairs has deepened, an Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

Despite Carter's midsummer efforts to change the course and image of his administration, he is now in serious trouble with almost every segment of the population – including politically crucial ones like Democrats, Southerners, small town and rural residents and his 1976 supporters.

This weakness comes as Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., has revealed in recent days that he is considering a challenge to Carter for the party's presidential nomination next year.

Overall, only 19 percent of those interviewed nationwide Monday and Tuesday rated Carter's work excellent or good.

That is down six points from the AP-NBC News July poll, which was his previous low.

Forty-nine percent said his efforts are only fair and 30 percent said they were poor. Two percent of the 1,600 adults interviewed nationwide by telephone were not sure.

The 19 percent mark is the lowest ever received by an American president since this rating question was first asked in the 1950s.

Carter's key weaknesses in the public's eyes are his handling of the twin threats of inflation and recession and his reaction to the presence of Soviet combat troops in Cuba.

On his handling of ecnomic problems in general, only 10 percent of the public gave Carter an excellent or good rating for his work on the nation's economic woes – the lowest job rating ever for Carter in any area. Forty-seven percent said his work has been poor and forty percent called it as only fair. Three percent were not sure.

On foreign policy in general, 22 percent of those interviewed gave him top marks – down 11 points from July. Forty-two percent rated his international efforts only fair and 32 percent said they were fair. Four percent were not sure.

Harriers prepare for opener against BC

by JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Coming off last year's 8-3 record, the UMass men's cross-country team is going to have their work cut out for them early on in the season. "It's going to be a tough task after losing four of our top runners," said harrier coach Ken O'Brien.

By the end of the first few weeks the harriers should have a good idea where they stand after they face the top three teams in New England, Providence College, Northeastern and Harvard.

Senior captain Rick Walls leads the returning varsity and is expected to be their top running prospect, along with junior Mike Dorian and senior Mike Morris who make up the remainder of last year's varsity squad. Also expecting to help the harriers with their running experience is senior Bob Martin and junior Kevin Molteni.

This year's freshman prospects include Rick Dorian, the high school two mile Massachusetts state champion from Gardner, and John Marr, one of the top high school runners from Maine, along with juniors Kevin Corcoran, Paul Beaulieu and Chris Omeltochenko who will probably round out this year's squad.

The harriers first meet will be on Sept. 21 against Boston College, at home. "B.C. has 1 or 2 outstanding people, but we have been able to beat them pretty consistently," said Coach O'Brien.

"We have a strong team this year," said capt. Walls. "We should beat them, but we're not going into the match overconfident either," said Walls.

"I'm optimistic about the team," said O'Brien. "They've all come back on really great shape, and we are expecting our most experienced runners to lead the way," concluded O'Brien.

Yaz Day in Boston

BOSTON (AP) — A crowd estimated by police at 20,000 mobbed Boston's historic Quincy Market in front of Fanueil Hall Thursday and paid tribute to Red Sox star Carl Yastrzemski.

In honor of Yaz' 3,000th career hit the night before, Mayor Kevin White declared it "Carol Yastrzemski Day" in the city.

As the crowd cheered, Yastrzemski asked White on the podium: "Does this mean I can be mayor?"

In a more serious vein, Yastrzemski said, "Every time I put on a Red Sox uniform I represent Boston, Massachusetts and New England. In 19 years, I've tried to do so with class and dignity."

A 10-foot long cake, in the shape of a baseball bat, was served to the crowd after the 20-minute ceremonies, and Yaz, dressed in a suit and tie, went to City Hall for a private reception.

Recent CRC decision may change Title IX

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

The most recent decision taken by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission suggesting that all intercollegiate sports receive per capita spending lends a distressing air to the debate of men's versus women's athletics and the implications of Title IX altogether.

Commentary

Title IX of the Euducational Amendments passed by Congress, prohibits sex discrimination in federally funded educational programs.

The Commission will now make its recommendations to the department of Health, Education, and Welfare and a decision should be reached early next year.

Since 1972, Title IX has met tremendous opposition; first from the high-revenue producing men's sports such as football, who felt their programs might be lessened, and then groups supporting women's sports who scoffed at any mention of excluding those revenue producing sports.

Yet, at a time when intercollegiate athletics have become so expensive, the reasons for excluding high revenue sports from the auspices of Title IX are more than economical.

At UMass, Title IX has done much to improve facilities, women's sports, and the quality of competition. The inclusion of women's lockers in Boyden and designated "coed areas" in the three athletic facilities were long overdue. In order to offer the same number of programs to both sexes, women's track, tennis, and soccer were added and scholarships were given to women's gymnastics and basketball.

But when something is given, something has to be taken away. People forget that to build up the women's programs at UMass, several men's programs had to suffer.

Men's gymnastics at UMass once enjoyed a prolific, nationally competitive, scholarship assisted program. Those who remember the team prior to 1972, including coach Roy Johnson, speak of the good years gone by. Gymnastics now has to rely entirely on recruiting, and it is not likely that the program will ever regain its former strength without the scholarship incentive.

The discontinuation of the UMass Hockey team can, in part, be blamed on Title IX as well. In 1972, UMass was the national Division II hockey champion. Without their own rink, UMass was held together by scholarships and the recruiting of coach Jack Caniff. Yet after the crucial 1972-73 season, UMass hockey lost all but one of its scholarships. When it became apparent that financial woes in the athletic department would prevent a hockey facility from perhaps ever being built on campus, the hockey program and Caniff, who had waited patiently for 14 years were dropped.

Now men's football looms as the next victim of Title II influence. The U.S. Civil Rights Commission has suggested that "measurable factors" such as recruiting costs, athletic scholarships and all other readily measurable benefits and opportunities" be spread evenly. Football will be expected to share money that they alone make from gate receipts, advertising as well as television contracts with the rest of the university.

Its time to get back to reality. As exciting as women's gymnastics is, or how competitive the field hockey team will be, these sports do not have the drawing potential. It is clear that there is tremendous more fan support for football, and to ask football to cut back its program is unfair.

There is truly a reversal of the Civil Rights question. With the mass interest in football, who would best be served by cutting back and spreading evenly? Football is not gymnastics or hockey. It might be suggeted that the money and appeal gained by a large organization might be used to satisfy a relative few.

Spikers get set to open season at URI tourney

By Maureen Sullivan
Collegian Staff

After being overwhelmed by Warsaw Academy Wednesday night, the UMass women's volleyball team will try for their first wins of the regular season Saturday when they meet four teams in the URI Tournament.

First-year coach Elaine Marasco said of her team's performance against Warsaw as "pleasing overall."

"I was especially pleased with our service; we didn't fault service once in the three games of the match. Also, our blocking was effective against their attack. As far as weaknesses go, our passing was errant, and we had a lack of communication whenever the ball was on our side. However, these are not major weaknesses, but they're good to find this early in the season. This game against Warsaw helped us to focus on our weaknesses, and the match will serve as a great motivation for the coming season."

Of the coming tournament in Kingston, she said, "The tournament will help us determine the direction we're going; we know what sort of direction we're going right now, but the matches in URI will set the tone for the season."

The teams participating in the URI Tournament will be the University of Rhode Island, Providence College, the University of Connecticut, and Farleigh-Dickinson.

Preparing for Saturday, the members of the UMass squad refined their serving and spiking. The practice held Thursday afternoon at NOPE was "one of the best we've had so far," according to assistant coach Mike Rhodes.

After the Tournament, UMass will prepare for a week, in order to face the University of New Hampshire and Vermont next Saturday afternoon at NOPE gym.

Last year, the URI Tournament was played in November; out of the 16 teams participating, UMass placed 14th, winning only one match (against Vermont). Maryland won the tournament.

This year, instead of the URI Tournament, the late-season exhibition of volleyball teams from around the east will be held at Rutgers University in New Jersey on November 10.

UMass enjoys a brief home stand for the rest of September; after UNH and Vermont, they play Boston College on September 25.

Season opener

Gridders seek Wildcat revenge

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team will draw back the curtain on its 1979 season when it visits the 0-1 Wildcats of Villanova University in Philadelphia for a 1:30 p.m. contest Saturday afternoon.

Entering his sophomore year as head coach of the UMass Minutemen, Maine native Bob Pickett will lead a team against Villanova that has only four starters from the offense and three starters from the defense returning from last years 9-4 squad that was runnerup for the NCAA 1AA National Championship. Chief among those returnees is senior quarterback Mike McEvilly who will be counted on heavily to run the UMass offense. Elsewhere on the offense, Pickett will be looking to returnees Cliff Pedrow at halfback and Kevin O'Connor at flanker.

Defensively, the Minutemen will use a youthful lineup that lists only three seniors in the starting eleven. Linebacker Ken Horn (new to the position), and cornerbacks Steve Lemay and Kevin Sullivan will lend their experience to the UMass defense.

"I don't know at this time if the inexperience on our defense will show up," said Bob Pickett. "I do know that the people that we have in there now can and should do the job."

Villanova, 5-6 last year, comes into the game after a tough loss to national power house Maryland in a close 24-20 contest that the Wildcats lost with 54 seconds left. In that game, Villanova lost regular halfback Dana Shelton for the year with a knee injury.

Wildcat quarterback Pat O'Brien, nine for 15 against Maryland last week, will be looking to sophomore wide-receiver Willie Sydnor who caught six passes for 64 yards in the Maryland game.

"Mass. is always tough to run against though," said Wildcat head coach Dick Bedesem. "We're going to try to fo into the game with as balanced an attack as possible because Mass. hasn't played yet so we haven't scouted them and don't know exactly what to expect."

Last year, UMass hosted Villanova in the season opener and lost a 25-21 heartbreaker to the Division One foe. Now, with people like Dennis Dent and Hank Sareault gone, the Minutemen will be looking for help to penetrate the tough Villanova defense that sports defenders like back Dan Burke who made 15 total tackles in the Maryland game. UMass has also lost a lot of size on the offensive line which Bedesem calls "the biggest team we played last year."

Bedesem will employ the "wishbone" offense against UMass which will use the "Oklahoma 50" defense to counter. Defensively, the Wildcats will use the "Fifty" defense to protect against the "Pro-I" and "Wing-I" offensive alignment of UMass.

Overall, the season series between the two schools has Villanova leading 3-2 after last year's win, With the exception of the first game between the two in 1961, not more than four points has separated them in the final score.

After this Saturday, UMass will return to Amherst to host the University of Maine in next Saturday's home opener.

Catch all the action of Minutemen football on WMUA, 91.1 FM, this Saturday at 1:30 when UMass takes on Villanova in Philadelphia. Howie Sobolov and Tim Wasserman describe the action. Minuteman Huddle with Jim Mullins begins at 1:00.

Pats sign Washington

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The New England Patriots have signed veteran cornerback Mark Washington, cut by the Dallas Cowboys in the pre-season after nine years with the National Football League team.

Washington, 31, a Morgan state product, takes the Patriots roster spot vacated by running back Horace Ivory, who is on the injured list with a knee ailment. Washington will be in uniform Sunday when the Patriots play the Bengals in Cincinnati.

More plaudits for Yastrzemski

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Carl Yastrzemski has nestled into his niche in baseball's pantheon, among the other hard-hitting heroes who are part of the sport's lore.

The City of Boston honored the Boston Red Sox star yesterday and the kudos continued to wash over the 40-year-old slugger whose Polish name — once a unpronounceable mystery to fans — is now in the statistical company of such elite as Cobb, Speaker, Lajoie, Anson, Wagner, Mays, Musial and Aaron.

At 9:39 p.m. Wednesday, Yaz bounced a single into right field off New York Yankee righthander Jim Beattie — a native New Englander from South Portland, Maine — for his 3,000th hit.

"I grew up idolizing Yastrzemski," said the pitcher, who was six years old when Yaz broke in with Boston in 1961.

As has been trumpeted for weeks, Yastrzemski — who never has had 200 hits in one of his 19 American League seasons — is the first in AL history to couple 3,000 with at least 400 homers.

"Your next milestone is Cooperstown," said league secretary Bob Holbrook, alluding to eventual election to the Hall of Fame.

The tributes focused on Yaz' grit. Yastrzemski continued to give credit to his family and teammates.

He thanked God for giving him a superb body. But it was Yaz himself who honed it, enabling him to play 2,850 games so far — more than all but four of the other 14 players who achieved 3,000 hits.

Fans thanked Yaz for the memories and Yastrzemski thanked the fans. He had been a gracious host this week. Family and friends had come to Boston waiting for the big moment and Yaz had wined and dined them.

After picking up one hefty dinner tab, Yaz cracked that hit No. 3,000 was "the most expensive of my career."

And despite a pressurized hitting slump as he struggled to reach the elusive goal, Yaz retained his composure.

He was patient with the pack of reporters and photographers, saying after a hitless Tuesday, "I came over to talk to you guys just to find out what you could possibly ask me."

Going in the right direction winner – a victor, esp. in games and sports, one that wins admiration. (Websters New International Dictionary)

The above word defined describes exactly the state of and future of the UMass football program. That's it; no ifs, ands, or buts. It's just that simple; from the depths of the UMass athletic dept. has come a winner.

Last year's 9-4 performance along with the fine showing against Florida A&M for the runnerup spot in the 1AA National Championship was the product of the development of the program over the past several years. Head coach Bob Pickett says that the program has become so strong that the graduating of people like Dennis Dent and Bruce Kimball no longer leaves the gaping holes that are found in most rosters after each May. The UMass recruitment program has created such depth that these holes are easily filled from the rosters of the JV squad.

What then has brought this exciting turnabout around? What is responsible for turning the UMass football program into one of the finest ones in the East?

The answer, believe it or not, was that the UMass athletic department engineered a move which dramatically boosted football. That move was the elevation of the football team from the seldom heard from ranks of Division Two to the newly formed (last year) Division 1AA. This move enabled UMass to play more "name" schools in addition to the regular opponents in the Yankee Conference that UMass still plays. Not directly along this line was an additional factor. That being the scheduling of more Division One opponents for UMass like Harvard and Villanova. This year, for example the UMass ten-game schedule includes four Division One opponents: the afore-mentioned two along with Holy Cross and Boston College.

The net result has been a "coat-tail" effect that has dramatically affected recruiting. After last year's banner season, head coach Pickett reported that he had recruited and signed no less than 16 high school players who could be considered "blue-chip" prospects. The prime example along this line is freshman running back Gary Pearson from Connecticut. Pearson had originally signed a letter of intent to play football with Maryland, a national Division One powerhouse. Yet, the freshman sensation changed his mind and came here instead. What actually changed his mind is uncertain; the fact is that the growing reputation of UMass football certainly didn't hurt.

Another example is versatile running back Asa Hilliard who hails from San Francisco and happens to be one of the finest recruits to come here in recent years. This is evidence in itself that the geographical scope of Pickett's recruitment is still expanding.

All this has been accomplished while the budget for the football program has virtually remained unchanged and may even have been cut somewhat. Enabling the Minutemen to expand their efforts has been the long awaited influx of television money into the program. Last year alone, the Minutemen appeared on the ABC Television Network twice during the Division 1AA semi-finals and finals. In a sense though football has been generating a lot of money not only for its own program, but for the entire athletic program as some of the TV money is shared throughout the athletic department.

So, getting back to my original statement, we've honestly got a winner here. This football team is good and is going to win some ballgames and put UMass on the map.

Along this line is student support for this football team or the lack of it. During past seasons while we were in Division Two and last year's maiden voyage in 1AA, there hasn't really been any excitement created on campus. Average attendance at the 36,000 seat Alumni Stadium has hovered around the 8,000 mark, even with free admission to students. Let's face it, they're going to be playing some quality ball out there, let's get out there and see 'em when they open against Maine next week. The place should be rockin'.

Speech plans expected to be finalized for Fonda, Hayden

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

With just under two weeks remaining before the scheduled arrival of Jane Fonda, 42, and her husband Tom Hayden, 40, the UMass Distinquished Visitor's Program last night announced its decision to move ahead with contract finalization.

The decision comes after a near-cancellation last week due to a DVP constitutional clause prohibiting admission fees charged to the undergraduate student body.

Spokesmen Joel Weissman and Howard Goldman last week said the September 30 program, with total costs estimated at $7,000, would be too costly for their limited budget. The DVP budget is not $26,000 -- minus previous commitments, which amount to approximately $8,000 per semester.

For the group to charge $1 admission fees, cutting total DVP costs to approximately $2,800, the Undergraduate Student Senate must waive the prohibiting bylaw for this event.

The motion before the Senate will be made Wednesday night, Goldman said, and come before the Senate committee September 26.

Goldman last night said whatever the Senate decision, his group will go ahead with contract finalization and legal commitment to cover all costs.

Director of the Student Activities Office O. C. Bobby Daniels will hopefully sign the contract tomorrow, Goldman said.

Daniels last night was unavailable for comment.

"We've got a good feeling about it," Goldman said. "We've overcome so many obstacles to get this far...we're going to really squeek this one through."

Goldman, who said he took an unofficial poll of student opinion in his own dorm, said, "Overall consensus on campus, whether people agree or disagree with Fonda and Hayden viewpoints, is positive.

"The DVP made a decision which will hopefully benefit the campus overall," he said.

Undergraduate Student Government Association Co-president Brian Burke last night said much controversy has been stirred over the proposed event.

"I don't know how the Senate will feel," he said. "A lot of people, I think, would like to see Jane Fonda speak...a lot of Viet Nam veterans on campus would be offended," he said.

Burke said opponants to the Fonda-Hayden appearance did not come to discuss her proposed visit with student officials at a twice-announced meeting last week.

"If all goes well, tickets will be on sale the 27 and 28, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.," Goldman said. "Hopefully all 4,000 tickets will be sold."

Tickets may also be for sale at the door, he said.

Only one ticket per person holding a valid UMass ID will be sold at the TIX office in the Student Union and at a desk before the Hatch cafeteria.

The Fonda-Hayden speeches are scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. Each will speak for 30 minutes, followed by one hour of questions from the floor.

Elm says 'ouch'

By ANNE MERCIER
Collegian Staff

There is a new danger to the Japanese Elm tree that stands in front of South College now that the library is closed.

Pedestrian traffic has been diverted closer to the tree causing "compaction" which can damage the tree's root system, said Francis W. Holmes, director of Shade Tree Laboratories on campus.

The Japanese Elm, famous for its beautiful stature, is a gift from the University of Hokkaida in Japan, given to this University in 1890, said Holmes.

Holmes has suggested an original fence which enclosed the tree be restored to lessen root injury.

"People's pressure causes tree stress. People are the most dangerous parthogen to trees, more dangerous than Dutch Elm disease," Holmes said.

The tree's "root system extends pretty far," said Holmes, and the tiny parts of the roots which absorb water from soil particles is easily damaged from pressure above the roots.

When the underground section of the main library was under construction in 1972-73, symptoms of root injury -- dying upper branches -- were noticed by Arborculture students, who organized to save the tree. The students fed and watered the tree, protested at the construction site, and set up a fence and sign warning people away from the root area, Holmes said.

Holmes believes the sign under the tree is unique because it is not in "elegant english"; the students composed ths sign and Holmes said its message is blunt and effective: "It's dying because people walk across its roots all the time. Help us save it -- Don't walk here."

Following the students precautionary actions, the tree "began filling out," and growing healthier, said Holmes.

During the 1880s, while UMass was the state Agricultural College, school officials were invited to Japan to start a university on the island of Hokkaida, said Holmes.

After finishing their preparations for the University's opening, the officials returned, bringing imported trees from Japan, which were planted around campus and in the center of Amherst, Holmes said.

According to Virginia Conrad, who works with the Archives Collection at the library, UMass files show that Dr. William P. Brooks, Head of Experimental Station, was responsible for importing the Japanese Elm, Ulmus japonica.

The University President's office was on the second floor of what is now South College, and the tree was planted in the yard so the president could see it from his office window, said Holmes. Other Japanese Elms were planted at the Presidents's home on campus, which is now used as the Chancellor's house.

Holmes said the Japanese Elm does not grow wild anywhere in the United States as some other imported species do, like the Siberian Elm. He said he receives many requests for seeds and pollen from the 90-year-old tree from other universities and experimental stations.

Campus bar theft investigated

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

UMass police say they are investigating the theft of $190 from a Top of the Campus Restaurant and Lounge safe that occurred on August 29. It has been learned that one of the four TOC employees investigated in the case has admitted to the theft.

According to UMass Police Detective Daniel Hagan the case is still being investigated, but Campus Center Director William Harris said Ronald Reid, former supervisor of the beverage division of the TOC admitted last Friday to taking the money. Harris said Reid used $96 from the safe to pay a beer tap repairman and that Reid took the receipt of payment and the remaining $94 home with him.

He said Reid has returned both the receipt and the money. Harris also said there was a total of $600 in the safe on the night the incident occurred. Harris added, "If he were a common criminal he would have taken all of the money."

Reid could not be reached for comment last night.

Initially, four employees who were working the night the theft occurred were under suspicion. Calls were made to the four men by Harris, Campus Center Financial Manager Mohammed Idrees, and TOC Food and Beverages director Richard Ellis on August 31. Two of the four were cleared at that time. The remaining two, Michael Gongas and Reid were still under investigation.

When the calls were made, Gongas, Reid and one of the other employees were told they would be fired if the incident was not cleared up. Reid was transferred to a position as night security officer in the Campus Center under Director of Campus Center Operations Dudley Bridges. Gongas, a six year employee of the University, has since acquired a position in New York and has resigned from his job at the TOC. He was cleared of all charges yesterday morning by the UMass police. Of his involvement in the incident, Gongas said, "It looks bad when an employee of the University is transferred to another position while being investigated by the police."

Gongas added that Reid had originally denied taking the money.

When asked why Reid was transferred to a security position while he was still being investigated by the police, Harris said, "The decision was made so as to remove him from a position where he would be dealing with TOC monies." Harris said there was no way he could temporarily suspend or fire Reid because university rules prevent an employee from being relieved of duty without an administrative hearing.

In the mean time, since Reid would still have access as a security officer, to rooms with safes, the combinations of the TOC safes have been changed as a precaution, according to TOC Director Ellis.

No formal charges have yet been leveled against Reid.

At press time the police had not completed the investigative report but said it should be out today.

Of Reid, Harris said, "He only worked for us three days, but he was a good worker at the TOC -- well liked by his peers."

Congress talks gas rations

WASHINGTON (AP) —Congressional energy conferees will make another try this week at forging a compromise standby gas-rationing bill while the full House and Senate go to work on the federal budget.

House-Senate conferees on the bill to give the president authority to ration gasoline in a shortage are snarled in a dispute over whether Congress should have prior veto power over such a plan.

The conference committee scheduled an afternoon meeting today and leaders were hopeful a compromise could be reached by mid-week.

Both House and Senate have cleared the boards for floor debate this week on the 1980 budget. Both chambers will deal with measures containing higher spending propsals and bigger budget deficits than they agreed to tentatively last May.

Cars banned for pope visit

BOSTON (AP) —Most vehicles will be banned from a large area of Boston for 24 hours, before and during the visit by Pope John Paul II, Mayor Kevin H. White announced.

The October 1 ban, announced Saturday, will be in effect from midnight on Sunday, September 30, until midnight on Monday, October 1. The pope is due to arrive in Boston the afternoon of October 1, say a Mass on Boston Common, spend the night in the city and go to New York on October 2.

The mayor's office also announced that no street vendors will be allowed in the restricted area during the papal visit, although some business firms are expected to remain open.

Commerical trucks and vans making deliveries must leave the restricted area by 10 a.m. on October 1.

The restricted area, from which most vehicular traffic will be banned, is within Massachusetts Avenue, Storrow Drive and the Southeast Expressway. Cars will be permitted to use those arteries but not to enter the area.

Afghan rule changes

NEW DELHI, India (AP)— President Nur Mohammed Taraki of Afghanistan resigned the presidency and leadership of the ruling party yesterday, Radio Afghanistan reported, as intensifying rebel warfare and political dissension pushed the country deeper into turmoil.

Taraki, citing poor health, resigned as president in favor of Prime Minister Hafizullah Amin. The 50-year-old Amin, considered a more hard-line communist than Taraki, had forced him into the background in recent months and emerged as the pro-Soviet regime's strongman.

Afghanistan has been weakened by an internal split in the ruling Khalq (People's) Party and an insurgency by right-wing Moslem tribesmen, who now control about half the countryside.

East Germans hot-air balloon over Berlin Wall to freedom

Associated Press

NAILA, West Germany —Eight East Germans, including four children, floated through the night skies over Germany and across the "death strip" border to the West yesterday in a homemade hot-air balloon stitched together from bits of nylon and bedsheets.

The group, made up of two families each with two children, escaped in a 12-mile, 20- minute flight that ended in this Bavarian town six miles from the border. Their leader, an airplane mechanic, told reporters they had prepared for the trip for two months, since they failed in their first attempt July 4.

The mechanic, who asked that none of their names be used, said they fled for political reasons, because "it was no longer possible for us to lie to our children and put up with the political conditions in East Germany."

It was believed to be the first time refugees had used a balloon to cross the closely patrolled border, which is strung with electrified fences and minefields.

During the flight, the children rode in the middle of the gondola, an 18-square-foot iron plate, and were huddled around bottles of gas used to fuel a fire that heated air in the 5,230-cubic-yard balloon. The adults rode on four iron rods projecting from the plate, each grabbing onto inch-thick ropes attaching the gondola to the balloon.

The airplane mechanic, who said he was a civilian employee of the East German army, was accompanied by his wife and two sons, aged 11 and 15. The others were a brickmason, his wife and two sons, aged two and five years.

The mechanic said the escape began about 1:30 a.m. near the East German town of Lobenstein when they filled the balloon with hot air. A half-hour later, with a light, northwest wind to push them westward, they took off, floating toward the border under starry skies at about 25 miles an hour, he said. They reached a maximum altitude of 8,000 feet, he said.

The group was met by two West German police officers who had raced to the landing site, thinking they might be following a UFO.

"Are we in the West here?" one of the two balloonists reportedly asked.

"We were convinced that we were in the West even before the police officers came because we saw a modern farm machine on the field unlike anything we have," the mechanic later told a reporter.

Wisconsin newspaper prints edition with H-bomb directions

Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. —A diagram and the complete text of a controversial letter that the government says contains secret information about the hydrogen bomb were published yesterday in a special edition of the Madison Press Connection.

The letter — written by Charles Hansen, a computer programmer from Mountain View, Calif. — figured in a Saturday night ruling by a federal judge in San Francisco, who issued a temporary rsstraining order barring the student-run Daily Californian of Berkeley from publishing it.

As published in the Press Connection, Hansen's 32-page letter is about half technical information on what he says is how to build and trigger a hydrogen bomb and half social commentary on the need of the American people to have the information so they will understand the weapon's destructive power.

The letter also complains that several scientists have released secret data related to the bomb and have not been prosecuted, while free-lance writer Howard Morland, who wrote an as-yet unpublished article on the bomb, and others working from those documents have been the target of Energy Department action.

U.S. District Judge Robert Schnacke ordered the Daily Californian and two of its editors not to publish or give anyone else material from the letter, which the government classified earlier in the week as "secret restricted data" under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954.

No injunction was issued to the Press Connection, however.

Mark Sheehan, a Justice Department spokesman in Washington, said the department had no information on the publication and would have no immediate comment.

Jim Bishop, Energy Department spokesman, also declined comment.

Hansen, 32, says his hobby is collecting documents about nuclear weaponry. Copies of his letter, written to Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., apparently had been sent to as many as seven newspapers and several individuals.

The Press Connection, which normally does not publish on Sunday, printed an eight-page extra edition, most of it devoted to the text of Hansen's letter.

The newspaper said it decided to publish the material as an answer to what it called government censorship.

Physical Plant starts road, lot improvements

By NORM WHITEHURST
Collegian Staff

The UMass Physical Plant has begun improving roads but it might be awhile before all proposed safety projects are completed, said William A. Lambert, University landscape architect last week.

He said bids for the project went out in August 1978, but all were rejected by UMass officials. Bids went out again in December 1978 and the contract was given to the Mackin Construction Company of Greenfield.

The Mackin crew is now expanding parking lot 65 to provide for a new walk-way system for pedestrians safety and an access route for fire apparatus, Lambert said.

Infirmary Road is also being modified -- providing more walk-ways and making dormitories such as Brett House in the Central Residential area more accessible to the handicapped.

Parking lot 40 near the Campus Center Garage is being resurfaced and grated for storm drainage.

This work alone will cost $487,000 paid by the state from deferred maintenance money, Lambert said.

The University is requesting an additional $1.5 million to the $1 million already received last year from the state to complete other safety projects around the campus. Lambert said asking for more money for the projects is hard because some legislators in Boston are unconcerned with UMass.

The funds are needed to complete additional projects designed by Lambert which are:

-Closing a portion of road where Sunset and Massachusetts Avenues cross.

-Installing a fence on a median strip from Commonwealth Avenue to Lincoln Avenue. There will be no crosswalks between the two locations.

-Moving a bus stop from Hampshire House to the driveway entrance to James Dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area.

-Moving a bus stop from Hampshire House to a location near the ROTC building. Both bus stops will then be on the west side of a pedestrian underpass rather than the east side.

-Installing two traffic lights -- one at the intersection of Massachusetts and Commonwealth Avenues and the other at the intersection of University Drive and Commonwealth Avenue.

-Widening Commonwealth Avenue to Governors Drive and installing sidewalks there.

-Straightening Governors Drive to parking lot 31.

-And raising the sidewalks on Eastman Lane.

Bids for these projects will open in late fall with work to begin the first of the year. Work should continue throughout the winter depending on the severity of the weather, Lambert said. He said once construction is completed in parking lot 65 sometime this year, The School of Food and Nutrition will try to convince state nurseries to donate plants, trees, and shrubs to the University for students to plant around the area as projects.

Lambert said, "This will be good for the students because they will be helping to build up an area instead of their reputation to destruct."

Student tenants face high utility bills

By VICTORIA JONES
Collegian Staff

Impending exams may no longer be the major concern of off-campus students this winter.

Ninety-five percent of all student tenants will be paying their own utility bills in the coming months, and as oil prices continue to rise, many students will have restrictive budgets.

Local oil company officials say a logical solution to keeping heating costs down is insulation. The initial cost is deferred by months of lowered heating bills. But informed tenants say local apartments were not built ecologically and waste energy because they have patio windows, linoleum floors with heating units at floor level and obsolete insulation.

Tenants of Colonial Apartments paid individual utility bills last year. As a result, the Colonial Village Tenants Union attempted to accept bids for insulation work, but the management has taken no positive action. Western Mass. Electric Co. is backing the union, because although the present insulation was up to standards when installed years ago, insulation loses effectiveness over the years and standards have been raised as well.

Last year, rent for a two-bedroom apartment was lowered by $30 a month, but winter utility bills averaged $50 per month. This winter, monthly bills are expected to average between $65 and $80 per month.

Belchertown Petroleum Products, a local oil company, reports adequate fuel supplies, with larger reserves now than in previous years. Agway Petroleum Service and National Heating CO. Inc. report oil prices of 85.9 cents per gallon this month, with rumors of $1.10 by January 1980.

Students paying their own heating bills can get assistance from the Cooperative Extension Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture at UMass. They offer an insulation program open to students. The off-campus housing office also has utility information, and suggestions concerning available services.

Last year, rent for a two-bedroom apartment was lowered by $30 a month, but winter utility bills averaged $50 a month.

Theatre Guild prepares to present world premier

By ANDREW SHARPE
Collegian Staff

The UMass Theatre Guild is getting ready to present the world premier of the musical, "Just Friends of 1923," written by former UMass student Peter Niemczura. "Just Friends of 1923" is a musical about the lives of two high society New York families during the roaring twenties.

The Guild is Recognized Student Organization run entirely by UMass students, said Doug Feinburg, publicity director. The group receives no financial support from the University and has no faculty advisers. The Guild is over 40 years old and has been self-sufficient since 1970, when funding was cut off by the UMass Arts Council. Feinburg said the Guild uses money raised from each production to finance the following one.

Feinburg said the Guild is independent of the theater department, in fact very few of the 36 member cast are theatre majors. He said this allows students who have some theatrical experience that would like to perform, a chance to be part of a serious production. Feinburg said there are still openings for stage help, and any person who would like to be part of the stage crew should contact the producer Tony Magner.

"Just Friends of 1923" opens on Thursday, November 1, at Bowker Auditorium and runs for five more days -- November 2 and 3 and then the following week for three more shows on the 8, 9, and 10.

No-nukers march, rally on Amherst Common

By MARGARET FIORE
Collegian Staff

To the tune of the hymn "Amen" about 150 to 200 protesters sang the lyrics, "no nukes," marched, and carried banners along Triangle Street to the Amherst Common Saturday afternoon for a rally there against nuclear energy.

The purpose of the event, organized by the Amherst chapter of the Alternative Energy Coalition, was to announce future large-scale demonstrations and inform the public of why they oppose nuclear power. Protesters sang songs led by coalition member Al Giordano who also performed comic skits. Giordano is a member of the Darn Yankee Atomic Road Show, a Belchertown-based group which performs anti-nuclear-related educational skits for school children.

Speakers denounced nuclear energy and weapons, outlined plans for demonstrations, and reported on the results of past demonstrations while protesters sat on the grass, played frisbee, and munched on slices of watermelon.

The noon march before the rally began at Amherst Regional High School on Triangle Street. One sign read, "Better Active Today Than Radioactive Tomorrow," and a banner, supported with the help of an elderly woman read, "Mothers, Fathers, and Grandparents for Children's Survival."

But, rally organizer Nancy DuBosque said she was disappointed with the turnout because although the rally was aimed at the entire community it was mostly attended by college-age sympathizers.

"I probably know most of them (the protesters). We didn't start our publicity early enough," DuBosque said.

Future anti-nuclear actions announced at the rally are--a protest at the Yankee energy plants in Vernon, N.H. and Rowe on September 23 and 24 respectively; and occupation October 6 of a plant at Seabrook, N.H.; and a demonstration on Wall Street October 29, which is aimed at halting trading of nuclear power stock.

Groups represented in the rally, which lasted until 4 p.m., included Women Against Nuclear Destruction; Community Self-Reliance; Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group; and Stop the Draft.

"I probably knew most of them (the protestors). We didn't start our publicity early enough."

Police arrest nine minors for alcohol possession

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

UMass police arrested nine persons for possessing alcohol while under age this week, according to UMass Sgt. Richard S. Grader.

Lisa G. Robinton, 19, of 1611 George Washington Tower was arrested for the illegal sale of alcoholic beverage, possessing alcoholic beverages with intent to sell, furnishing liquor to minors and possession of marijuana, as well as for being under 20 and possessing alcohol, Grader said.

Grader said police investigated a call Saturday afternoon that there was a "barroom set-up" in Washington tower. Confiscated were ten one-half gallon jugs containing varying amounts of liquor.

Police Sunday arrested Gerard J. Ryan, a non-student from South Natick for possessing alcohol under age. Ryan, 18, was spotted by UMass police carrying a case of beer on campus and was asked to produce identification of age, Grader said.

Three persons under 20 were arrested outside of Coolidge Tower shortly after midnight Sunday morning for possessing alcohol. Arrested were, Alan D. Brayton, 19, of 1308 George Washington Tower, William R. Carson, 18, of 1302 Washington Tower and Donald Sloan, 18 from Concord.

Also arrested Sunday morning for possessing alcohol under age were Edward C. Donovan, 18, of 717 John F. Kennedy Tower; Paul McNulty, 19, of 1701 Kennedy Tower; John J. Beggan, 18, from South Boston, and Christopher P. Long, 18, also from South Boston.

Police arrested the four men on the seventh floor of Kennedy Tower following a report of a disturbance on that floor.

Also arrested by UMass police this weekend was John T. Belland, 19, on charges of larceny under $100 for the theft of a chair from John F. Kennedy tower.

Five persons were taken into protective custody this weekend by UMass police. Three were men and were transported to Amherst jail and two women were taken to the Northampton Police Department

Fall television season begins ratings battle

By ROD CARVETH
Collegian Staff

A new TV season has arrived and the battle continues between ABC, CBS, and NBC for the right to be called the "number one" network. While some of the new shows in the networks' fall lineups have already made their debuts, yesterday was the official launching of the new season as the competition between the networks began. Yesterday NBC aired a three-hour Bob Hope special from China, pitting that against Annie Hall on ABC and a CBS movie, The Tenth Month, starring Carol Burnett. The quest for ratings points -- with each point representing a potential $35 million in advertising revenue -- is here again.

Viewers will be seeing much of the same types of programs as in the past few seasons. Of 21 new shows this fall, eight are comedies, three are police shows and two are medical series. The variety show, a staple of early television years, has all but disappeared in series format, surviving only in occasional specials.

Mini-series, such as Roots and Rich Man, Poor Man, will appear less frequently, due to their rising costs, although there will be more TV-movies.

Of the three networks, ABC currently enjoys the number one spot, and should remain in that position not only for the current season, but also for the next few years also. The network split the Happy Days -- Laverne and Shirley comedy tandem on Tuesday nights by first switching Laverne and Shirley to Thursdays at 8 p.m., and then shifting Mork and Mindy to 8 p.m. on Sundays. While on the surface it appears as though ABC broke up one of is trongest programming blocks, it actually strengthened its programming by being able to "hammock" its newer, but possibly weaker, comedies -- Angie, The Associates and Benson -- between its stronger shows in the hopes that these new comedies can pick up the ratings strength of the more established shows.

Angie, seen by ABC executives as still lacking real rating strength, will fill the slot between Happy Days and Three's Company on Tuesdays. The Associates, a comedy about a Wall Street law firm, created by the producers of the Emmy-winning, Taxi, will air between Mork and Mindy and the ABC Sunday Night Movie. Benson, stars Robert Guillaume in the role of the butler from Soap who has now moved to run the household of a bumbling governor of an unidentified Eastern State. Given both the time slots of the new comedies and the reputations of their writing teams, both The Associates and Benson should be ratings winners.

[Editor's note: This is the first in a three part series on the fall television season.]

Conference marks Sanger's birth

A conference commemorating the centennial of the birth of Margaret Sanger, founder of the international birth control movement, will be held at Smith College November 13 and 14.

The Sanger Centennial Conference -- organized by the Sophia Smith Collection (a women's history archive), and supported by a $12,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities -- will consider issues surrounding and stemming from Sanger's life and work, according to Ann Shanahan, Smith news director.

In addition to speakers and panel discussions, the conference will deal with documents written by Sanger and other feminists and birth control advocates over the past century.

Those wanting more information should contact Dorothy Green, research associate, Sophia Smith Collection at Smith College.

Nestle: 'A Trojan Horse'

1979, "The International Year of the Child," may yet witness a substantive recognition of the cause so sprightly announced on bumper stickers and in gradiose official proclamations.

One of the crucial issues at hand is the widespread malnutrition attributed to the so-called bottle-feeding epidemic, a Trojan Horse brought to the Third World by expansive infant formula companies based in developed nations.

Gabriel Frayne

The controversy surrounding the promotion of infant formula in the Third World will soon undergo its single most comprehensive scrutinization since evidence of corporate foul play began reaching Western observers nearly a decade ago.

Next October 9 through 12, the World Health Organization (WHO), a UN agency, and UNICEF will sponsor a "Meeting on Infant and Young Child Feeding" at the WHO headquarters in Geneva.

The bottle-feeding controversy began simmering during the 1960's when infant formula producers, realizing their market in developing nations was leveling of, turned their focus to the Third World baby boom.

The industry soon put together a massive promotional effort involving billboards, radio and television ads, and sales representatives to convince mothers that bottle-feeding is the way "civilized" people attend to their infants.

The results proved highly successful for the industry, but not for the users.

Reports of bottle-induced malnutrition quickly emerged. A critical problem apparently hadn't aroused much foresight, or concern, among manufacturers: infant formula must be administered under stringently sterile conditions, but clean water and Western sanitary habits are rare in this lands.

Moreover, the relatively high cost of this milk substitute often leads mothers to overdilute the formula so as to make it last longer.

Today, as many as ten million Third World infants have suffered from bottle-feeding abuses, acording to Dr. Derrick Jeliffe, a UCLA nutritionist who has spent much time investigating the situation.

The World Health Organization gathering was arranged largely at the urging of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, whose Subcommittee on Health conducted hearings regarding the promotion and sales of infant formulas in developing nations in May 1978. Despite the procession of medical experts, industry representatives, industry critics and UN officials who testified before the generally well-informed committee, the hearings were inconclusive.

Thus Kennedy, in effect, passed the buck to the WHO, which is not to say that he had any other choice.

Certain obvious limitations must have occurred to the Senate subcommittee, and these limitations also apply to the WHO. Neither has the power to regulate the infant formula industry, as one might expect to be the case where a Swiss-based multinational leads the market. The WHO can only issue recommendations aimed at member governments and the industry itself.

Worldwide pressure on the infant formula industry has brought about some positive results. In July 1978, Nestle stopped all direct advertising of infant formula in developing nations following similar measures taken by other producers. Yet not to be discouraged, the industry continues to bring its message to the back door by sponsoring various "educational" forums for Third World health professionals, as well as providing free formula samples and bottle-feeding equipment to hospitals and clinics.

Furthermore, there is reason to doubt that a promotional moratorium alone could reverse the bottle-feeding trend, now entrenched by a decade of hard-sell tactics. One remedial possibility is that the WHO will recommend limits on the actual sales of infant formula, coupled with extensive educational efforts to promote breast-feeding.

A spokesman for Nestle commented, "We don't think that will happen."

One might also ponder this line of reasoning presented in a Nestle position paper: "...it is unrealistic to think that some sort of 'back to nature' crusade, which would be a prerequisite to a return to breast-feeding as practiced in rural settings, would any more succeed in the Third World in the 20th Century than it did in the Western World in the 19th." Nestle would appear to be under the impression that the bottle-feeding trend is a kind of toilet training en masse. That attitude, which has gained a great measure of acceptance among mothers in the Third World, may prove to be the greatest obstacle to a resumption of safe, inexpensive breast-feeding practices.

Senate reaction to troops in Cuba dangerous

The recently acknowledged presence of a Russian combat brigade in Cuba could have a serious effect on the future of the Salt II treaty. Senator Frank Church, a Democrat from Idaho and a respected voice on foreign affairs, insisted in his statement that the Russian presence in Cuba was; "Another testing of American will and resolve." And the senator now leads the movement to suspend any work towards ratification until the brigade is removed. Seantor Church has his allies. In typical hardline rhetoric Sen. Henry Jackson stated that; "We have allowed ourselves to drift into a position where the Soviets believe that they can do most anything that they and their Cuban Surrogate wish to do - even in this hemisphere."

What Jackson, Church and other hard liners are advocating is rejection of the Salt II treaty if the USSR does not withdraw its troops immediately. The inevitable Russian response will of course be that the U.S. is once again attempting to strongarm and extort Russian concessions to alter the already negotiated Salt II pact. They will then delay any action concerning their troops in Cuba. This will draw more nasty threats from the U.S. causing Russian resolve to grow even firmer. The net result of this hard line approach to the second Cuban crisis will be a cancellation of the Salt II treaty (which has been negotiated through three successive administrations) and a breach in Soviet-American relations that could return us to Cold War days..

Fortunately, President Carter has kept a cool head about him.

Despite what Mr. Church contends, a brigade of 3,000 men, whether combat or instructive, does not pose a serious threat to our security as a nation. And regardless of what Mr. Jackson may believe, the U.S. does not own this hemisphere.

If we follow the hard liners advice we stand to lose up to a decade of progress towards peace which includes Detente, Salt I and II, and increasingly friendlier relations with the USSR.

The presence of a Russian military unit in Cuba and the ratification of a nuclear arms treaty are distinctly separate issues and must be treated as such. Salt II has been constructed so as to insure Soviet adherence through U.S. surveillance. the cost of the arms race alone is sufficient for the ratification of the Salt II pact. Yet even more importantly, Salt II is a vital continuation of a policy that will eventually bring the U.S. and the USSR closer together. The U.S. should do nothing to endanger such a possibility.

Trust cannot only begin with the other side,

The Senate should deal with both issues separately. If they find Salt II unacceptable to American security then they of course shall reject it. And further, if they are dissatisfied with the way Pres. Carter eventually deals with the Russian presence in Cuba then they should apply pressure on the President.

At any rate, the advancement of mutual co-operation towards world peace and stability is far too important to be jeopardized in any way by the hard line, reactionary element within the U.S.

'I DOUBT IT, CARSTAIRS — IF THEY WERE SOVIET COMBAT TROOPS, WOULDN'T WE HAVE SPOTTED THEM AGES AGO?'

Kennedy: It depends

WASHINGTON |AP| —Sen. Edward M. Kennedy says a major factor in his decision whether or not to run for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination will be whether President Carter is able to regain the confidence of the American people.

"It's back to whether the people have the sense of confidence that he can deal with these issues. I think that's a matter of deepening and increasing concern to people as we come to the 1980s," the senator said in an interview with The Associated Press.

The interview with Kennedy took place the day after an APNBC News poll showed only 19 percent of those questioned rated Carter's work excellent or good. It was the lowest overall job rating for an American president in 30 years.

Sitting in his Senate office, its walls covered with momentoes of his career and those of his brothers, John and Robert, Kennedy insisted he has not yet decided whether to seek the presidency.

Carter gets medical OK

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP)— After his near-collapse in a foot race a day earlier, President Carter was given a "comprehensive examination" by his personal physician yesterday and pronounced in excellent health.

"The president's health is excellent and his strength is fully returned," said White House deputy press secretary Rex Granum. "He feels fine."

Carter entered his first competitive race, a 6.2 mile course up and down steep hills in the Catoctin Mountain National Park, Saturday but became wobbly and nearly collapsed after about 4 miles.

He was held up by two persons and escorted to a seat in a golf cart.

After resting for several hours at the presidential retreat, a renewed-looking Carter went back to the park for an awards ceremony.

Church law protested

Associated Press

NEWTON, Mass. —More than 60 men and women last weekend protested the Roman Catholic Church's stand against ordaining women as priests.

The protest took place outside and inside the Church of Our Lady Help of Christians, where eight men were ordained priests by Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, archbishop of Boston.

Protesters inside the church sat with heads bowed during the service. Those outside distributed position papers and carried signs with such slogans as: "Ordain Women Or Stop Baptizing Us."

Sister Claire McGowan, a Dominican nun and spokeswoman for the Women's Ordination Conference, said the demonstration was to, "raise up for the clergy and others the reality that women should be ordained."

She said the organization will hold protests next months in all six cities to be visited by Pope John Paul II to "communicate to him our belief that the changing role of women is the most critical issue in the church today."

"The women may be sincere, but they are wrong as far as I am concerned," Medeiros said. "The church does not consider itself authorized to admit them into the ministry,

Spikers share top spot with Rams at URI tournament

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team tied for first place with host team University of Rhode Island, as they defeated three out of four teams at the URI Tournament in Kingston, RI, Saturday.

UMass swept Providence College, 15-10, 15-8; it was the first time UMass had beaten PC in volleyball (according to UMass coach Elaine Marasco, UMass was beaten soundly by PC last weekend in a scrimmage, but her team had improved greatly since then). UMass then suffered its only loss at the hands of URI, 9-15, 15-10, 11-15. Farleigh-Dickinson of New York gave UMass a 4-15 thumping, but the Minutewomen came back to win the match, 15-4, 15-13. Connecticut fell to UMass for the first time, losing 15-3, 15-10.

"we did quite well," said Marasco, "it was a major team effort; everything we did -- serving, passing, spiking -- clicked together. Our serving was phenomenal; we forced the opposition to play a simple counterattack, which meant they couldn't set up their own offense. We passed very well (something that was missing in the match against Warsaw last Wednesday), and as the day wore on, our setting got progressively better."

Despite the wins coming as a result of a "team effort," Coach Marasco cited Peggy Barber, Brenda Simmons, Sally Anderson, and Ellen Braun for spearheading the UMass attack with key spikes, and Kathy Shinnick and Joyce Gresl for their setting.

"Overall, I was very pleased with the team's performance," said Marasco, "against every team at the tournament, they played extremely well. We had a real good day last Saturday, and I hope this good showing will continue throughout the season."

"I'm really encouraged by the results," she said, "all the hard work is beginning to pay off."

Last year, UMass finished 14th out of sixteen teams participating in the URI Tournament, which took place later in the season. This year, only five teams took part (UConn, URI, UMass, Providence College, and Farleigh-Dickinson); Rutgers University will host the region's best squads on November 10.

UMass will prepare all this week for their next three opponents -- University of New Hampshire, Vermont, and Boston College. UNH and Vermont come to NOPE gym on Saturday; BC visits next Tuesday, September 25.

Boston University and New Hampshire set up an early Yankee Conference showdown with victories, and once-mighty Boston College showed signs of coming back in defeat Saturday in featured games on the New England college football schedule.

The BU Terriers, loaded with experienced talent, turned two pass interceptions by Neil McGrath into second half touchdowns en route to a 24-13 victory over stubborn Maine in a Yankee Conference opener at Orono.

New Hampshire posted its second non-league triumph by rallying for a 26-17 home triumph over Holy Cross, now 0-2. The Wildcats' comeback set the stage for a conference showdown at Boston University this week.

Boston College, which lost all 11 games under first year coach Ed Chlebek last season, showed signs of new respectability despite a 28-16 loss to Tennessee in their opener.

An 11-point underdog, the BC Eagles surprised Tennessee by taking a 9-6 lead in the second period and then a 16-9 advantage at the outset of the third quarter. However, the offense bogged down after that because of a couple of interceptions and a fumble and the Vols rallied for the victory.

"We'll bounce back," promised Chlebek, who was fired and then rehired at the urging of his players last December. "We're out there to win and we're not happy with this defeat, but there were some good things. We moved the ball well and I thought we played well enough to win."

New Hampshire capitalized on a big break for its victory over Holy Cross. Trailing 14-13 and with fourth down and 17 yards to go at the Crusaders' 25, Tom Levitt uncorked a long pass into the wind. Holy Cross safety Glenn Verette tipped the ball and it sailed right into the hands of Dave Loehle in the end zone for the go-ahead touchdown.

Around the majors

CHICAGO - Claudell Washington's two-run homer in the first inning and Mike Squires' tie-breaking homer in the seventh powered rookie Rich Dotson and the Chicago White Sox to a 5-2 victory over the Oakland A's yesterday.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Julio Cruz drove in two runs and Bobby Valentine and Rodney Craig each collected two hits as the Seattle Mariners downed the Kansas City Royals 6-3 yesterday.

PITTSBURGH - Pete Falcone won only his sixth game in 19 decisions with relief help from Neil Allen, and Dan Norman smacked a home run to lead the New York Mets to a 2-0 victory yesterday over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

TORONTO - Roy Howell hit a solo homer and scored three times while John Mayberry added a solo shot and scored two runs to lead the Toronto Blue Jays to an 8-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians yesterday.

PHILADELPHIA - Garry Maddox tripled home an eighth-inning run yesterday to give the Philadelphia Phillies a 4-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

MILWAUKEE - Paul Molitor doubled home Charlie Moore in the seventh inning and Gorman Thomas belted his 42nd home run of the year, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 2-1 victory over the California Angels.

NEW YORK - Lance Parrish's bases-loaded single in the 12th inning keyed a four-run burst that carried the Detroit Tigers to an 8-4 victory over the New York Yankees yesterday and eliminated the world champions from the American league East race.

LOS ANGELES - Tom Seaver fired a three-hitter for his 52nd career shutout, tops among active major league pitchers, to pace the Cinncinati Reds to a 2-0 victory over the Dodgers.

Sox bombed, 13-3

BALTIMORE (AP) —Lighthitting Mark Belanger drove in three runs after launching Baltimore's nine-run first inning with a single and the Orioles rolled to a 13-3 decision over the Boston Red Sox yesterday.

Baltimore sent 14 batters to the plate against John Tudor, 0-2, and two successors before Gary Roenicke, who drove in the first two runs with a basesloaded single, took a third strike to end the rally.

Belanger, who had six RBIs in 182 times at-bat, was struck by a pitched ball on a second trip of the inning to drive in a run, and added two more later with a sacrifice fly and a single.

Al Bumbry and Doug DeCinces drove in two runs apiece for the Orioles, with DeCinces contributing two doubles to a 15-hit attack. Rich Dauer was the only starter not to hit safely, and Belanger the only one who failed to score.

PHILADELPHIA - After a slow first quarter when it looked like neither team wanted to score (three fumbles in the first four series of plays) the Villanova University Wildcats scored two quick touchdowns in the second quarter to take a commanding 14-0 lead over the UMass Minutemen and roll to an easy 35-7 win here Saturday afternoon.

At 7:17 of the second quarter Wildcat quarterback Pat O'Brien delivered a 41 yard pass into the hands of wide receiver Tim Robinson who scampered into the end zone with the first pass reception and touchdown of his young career. Two minutes later, speedy Willie Sydnor ran a Tim Fontaine punt back 64 yards and the Wildcats were sitting pretty with a 14-0 bulge.

The play that broke UMass' back came on the first play of the second half when Minuteman Mike Stone fumbled while returning the kickoff. Villanova's Steve Leonard recovered the ball on the UMass 27 yard line and the Wildcat wishbone offense went to work. Four plays later, Sydnor swept around the right side for 14 yards and carried the ball down to the one yard line. On the very next play, halfback Mike Gold plunged over for the TD to make it 21-0 Villanova.

Villanova head coach Dick Bedesem felt that his team's speed and its ability to capitalize on UMass errors were key factors in the win that evened their record at 1-1.

"We worked for it in the beginning, but we took advantage of their (UMass') mistakes in the second half," explained Bedesem. "There is no substitute for speed in a game like this; guys like Robinson and Sydnor are invaluable."

In the visitors locker room, UMass head coach Bob Pickett felt that the key player in the Villanova offense was quarterback Pat O'Brien.

"His ability to option and pitch the ball to his backs is extremely good," said Pickett. "He's the best they got; he makes the Robinsons and Sydnors go."

In the scoreless first quarter, the Minutemen had a solid drive going from their own 24 yard line only to hand the ball over to the Wildcats when UMass halfback Cliff Pedrow fumbled a pitchout from quarterback Mike McEvilly on the Wildcat 30. Tackle Steve Duda recovered the ball for Villanova to end the UMass drive. That series of plays and the next set of UMass downs saw some good passing from McEvilly including two completions to tight end Marty Paglioni on well run roll-out patterns. On the day, the senior southpaw was 14 for 22 with one interception.

What seemed to stifle the Minuteman attack was a terrific job by the Villanova defense against the run. In 38 attempts, UMass gained only 84 yards on the ground while Villanova runners piled up 315 yards rushing.

"There was no excuse for that," said Pedrow after the game. "Things went their way; they just stopped us." Bob Pickett concurred, saying "They took the plays away from us."

All in all, UMass turned the ball over four times; three fumbles and one interception. The only UMass score came with only nine minutes left in the game when McEvilly lofted a two yard pass to tight end Mike Barbiasz to cap a 61 yard drive that took nine plays. Sandro Vitiello kicked the extra point and UMass had its only seven points of the day.

That UMass score came after two more Wildcat TD's; an eight yard run on a keeper in the 3rd quarter for QB O'Brien and a seven yard run around the end for Shawn Passman early in the fourth.

The almost 500 yards that the Wildcats piled up in total offense provided a good show for the 8,550 fans in attendence at Villanova Stadium. Villanova never appeared to be in trouble after the first quarter as the Wildcats seemed to gain yardage at will from their wishbone formation.

The Minutemen, now 0-1, will try to regroup their efforts this Saturday when they host Maine in the home opener at Alumni Stadium.

Grogan leads Patriots over Bengals, 20-14

By TERRY KINNEY
Associated Press

CINCINNATI —New England quarterback Steve Grogan hit wide receiver Stanley Morgan with a 17-yard touchdown pass and set up a three-yard scoring run wby Don Calhoun with another pass to Morgan as the Patriots defeated the Cincinnati Bengals 20-14 yesterday in a National Football League game.

John Smith kicked a pair of 39-yard field goals for New England.

Rookie Jack Thompson, playing for Cincinnati quarterback Ken Anderson, who left the game with a back bruise, scored both the Bengals' touchdowns on runs of 1 and 14 yards.

New England improved its record to 2-1, while Cincinnati lost its third straight game.

Grogan hit Harold Jackson on a 57-yard pass play in the second quarter to set up the Patriots' first touchdown. Two plays later, Grogan threw to Morgan in the end zone for the score.

New England took the second-half kickoff and drove 90 yards in 10 plays to take a 14-0 lead. Grogan, on third down, found his receivers covered and ran 26 yards for a first down to keep the drive alive.

Morgan caught a 27-yard pass from Grogan at the Bengal 3-yard line and Calhoun scored on the next play.

Thompson engineered an 82- yard scoring drive late in the third quarter, carrying the final 14 yards on a quarterback draw up the middle. Smith kicked a field goal 16 seconds into the final period and booted his second three-pointer with a little less than eight minutes to play.

The Bengals went 70 yards on 10 plays for a touchdown late in the fourth quarter. A pass interference penalty gave Cincinnati a first down on the New England 1-yard line, and two plays later, Thompson drove in to score.

Anderson failed to move the Bengals on their first possession, but seemed to have Cincinnati cranked up a second time around.

Anderson scrambled five yards for a first down and, one play later, started to run again when he was hit and fumbled the ball. Tight end Dan Ross recovered for Cincinnati, but Anderson left the game with what at first was thought to be a kidney injury.

He was helped from the field at the start of the second quarter and did not return.

Interview with Tony Crayton

By Bari

Editor's Note; Tony Crayton was selected as the Coordinator of the Office of Third World Affairs a position formerly held by Stan Kinard. The Office of Third World Affairs coordinates the activities of the various, Third World R.S.O. groups, and the Third World Caucus of the undergraduate Student Senate. Below is an interview with Tony Crayton.

N·N· How do you feel about being selected for the position?

T·C· My hands are not tied in this postion so I can assist in being able to develop programs that people have wanted for a long time. Such as Black Solidarity Day, for instance, with its time and budgetary constraits and the inability to secure enough sincere committment from staff, administrators and faculty, I hope to alleviate some of these propblems.

Along with the above I can feel confident about the job two major reasons.

Firstly, over the past two years, I have managed to develop a solid and constructive relationship with members of the Amherst community.

Secondly I am no longer insecure over my finances. Job security can only exist, however, by my own personal commitment to principles this position should hold rather than the pay this position offers.

N·N· What are the responsibilities of yours? What responsibilities does your job entail?

T.C. My responsibilities entail advising, coordinating, recruitment and retention of Third World students primarily in Third World R.S.O. groups and in the undergraduate Student Senate. It is also my responsibility to advise and assist in the development of political and cultural programs, that enhance the education of Third World students, in a manner that the University is incurable of providing. In addition workshops, confrences and historical political forums are to be conducted at various times throughout the year.

However, I think it would be absured for me to approach this job from a strict format sense. As I said earlier, having the responsibilities to be an advisor and an advocate of Third World issues, I find it impossible to constrain myself to a paper defined job description,. To be more plain let me quote a great African American leader, El-Haj Malik Shabazz. "I'm not the kind of person who'll tell you what you like, I'll tell you the truth whether you like it or not."

Those persons within this community who know me and have worked with me, know how I stand and also know that I try to be as reasonable as circumstance allow.

N.N. What do you see as the major needs of the Third World community at UMass at the present time?

T.C. The first order of business is for students to get their degrees and leave here in your right mind to go back to your community and recover from your education.

We need a serious sense of community. We need to take off the arrogant facades, throw our titles in the garbage, look at ourselves as people honestly and see that the number one thing we truly lack up here is a home, a community, a place where we can feel a part and where we can feel secure. We need to reaffirm a commitment to ourselves, our families and our nation in exile.

Concreatly we need to make our experiences here more productive. Student organizations are a viable way to develop a sense of responsibility, descipling ourselves to a task and a commitment to fulfilling a goal.These things cannot come about unless we can solidify our ranks regardless of our positions, recruit more Third World students, faculty and staff and create meaningful and relevant programs utilizing the resources that exist in the Five College area.

N.N. What are some of these resources ?

T.C. The first and most important resource we have is ourselves. Many of the Third World faculty, staff and administrators posesses talents and skills that go beyond being commendable.

The library, if it doesn't fall on our heads, due to the mismanagement and possible corruption of certain university officials, houses an extensive amount of books, publications micro films and historically relevant papers such as the W.E.B. DuBois and Horace Mann Bond papers. The educational benefits in research and personal enrichment are unlimited due to the importance of having such papers at our disposal.

The C.C.E.B.S. program has over the years provided the type of academic counselling to support that secures for a large number of Third World students opportunities that would not exist at an all white university without it.

The resources are extensive and students should take every opportunity to make themselves aware of them.

N.N. Where do you see Black Studies at Umass heading in view of budget cuts at Umass?

T.C. There was a conference at UMass in April of 1978.It called together heads a Black Studies departments from all over the country for the same critical reasons. Black Studies is not and has not been excepted as a ligitimate area of study. Black Studies as a disciplinehasbeenunderattackfornotbeingdemonstratsjs scientific or having utility and relevance for the average American student, who incidently happens to be white. However thats their problem. Black Studies is here, growing and contribiting a great deal more to making American society more tolerable for its minorities, who represent three fourths of the world's population.

As far as budget constraints, it is important to note who gets cut and who doesn't, buck cuts reflect the university's priorities. I am confident that black studies will remain by our vigilence.

N.N. Concerning Seta Rampersad. You have had legal experience working at the Legal Services Office, what do you think happened to her and what are the legal remedies?

T.C. Everytime you go to court, the bailif reads out Commonwealth vs the defensdent, who ever they may be. It implies that the one prosecuting represents the people. Of course thats bullshit. If the D.A. in Northampton, having witnessed hundreds of demonstrators and yet failed to recognize that diverse group as representative of the Commonwealth, how could he claim that the past actions of that case respected justice?

Those persons at the hotel with Seta, having left her alive in dire need of medical attention and failing to provide such, should have been charged with negligent homicide.

Not being an attorney I'll base my view on the D.A.'s reaction. If he has a daughter and shes white and I being black, take her to a motel, assualt her by my own admission and leave her in need of medical attention and my actions result in her death, it is obvious that I could receive no less that a murder charge.

Justice in this country has never been worth the paper it is printed on.

Egypt: The Origin of Modern Civilization

By James Lewis, Jr.

Egypt is the oldest continous civilization known to mankind, estimated to have begun about 4,500 B.C. But Egypt has a mystic about it because most people are unaware of what its civilization was like.

Say James F. Clarke, in Ten Great Religions, "The ancient Egyptains have been the object of interest to the civilized world in all ages; for Egypt was the favorite home of civilization, science and religion." "Renowned for its discoveries in art and science, it was the world's university; where Moses and Pythagoras, Herodotus and Plato, all philospher and law givers, went to school. The Egyptians knew the length of the year and the form of the earth; they could calculate elipses of the sun and moon; were partically acquainted with geometry, music, chemistry, arts of design, medicine, anatomy, architecture, agriculture, and mining. In architecture, in the qualities of grandure and massive proportions they are yet to be surpassed. The largest building elsewhere erected by man are smaller than their pyramids;..."

"Many inventions, hitherto supposed to be modern, such as glass, mosaics, false gems, glazed tiles, enameling, were well know to the Egyptians."

"No nation has ever equalled them in their love for recording all human events and transactions. They wrote down all the details of private life with wonderful zeal, method, and regularity. Every year, month, and day had its records."

J.D. Bunsen says that "the genuine Egyptian writing is at least as old as Menes, the founder of the empire, perhaps three thousand years B.C.." The 1979 Readers Digest almanac states" 4500-3100 B.C., Egyptians built villages along the Nile river; begin to use hieroglyphs (picture writing); earliest recorded date believed 4241 B.C., marking beginning of Egyptian calendar; copper and glass come into use."

Clark says: "the oldest mural painting disclosed a state of the arts of civilization so advanced as to surprise even those who have made archaeology a study, and who consequently know how few new things there are under the sun. It is not astonishing to find houses with doors and windows, with verandas, with barns for grain, vineyards, gardens, fruit-trees in an orchard; houses furnished with a great variety of chairs, tables, ottomans, carpets, couches. as elegant and elaborate as any used now.

There are comic and genre pictures of parties, where the gentleman and ladies are sometimes represented as being the worse for the wine; of dances where ballet girls in short dresses perform very modern-looking pirouetts; of exercises in wrestling, games of ball, games of chance like chess or checkers, of throwing knives at a mark, of the modern thimblerig, wooden dolls for children, curiously carved wooden boxed, dice, and toy balls."

"There are men and women playing on harps, flutes, pipes cymbals, trumpet, drums, guitars, and tambourines. Glass was, till recently, believed to be a modern invention, unknown to the anicents. But we find it commonly used...more then three thousand eight hundred years ago. The best Venetian glass workers are unable to rival some to the old Egyptian work; for the Egyptians could combine all colors in one cup, introduce gold details of feather, etc, which it now requires a microscope to makeout."

THE GOD SHU

B.C. and are sometimes estimated to have been built as far back as 4000-4500b.c.).

"The Egyptian tanned leather and made shoes; and the shoemakers on their benches are represented working exactly like ours. Their carpenters used axes, saws, chisels, drills, planes, rulers, plummets, square, hammers nails, and hones for sharpening. They also understood the use of glue in cabinet making."

"They were able to spin and weave, and color cloth and were acquainted with the use of mordants, the wonder in modern calico-printing. Writing paper made of the papyrus is as old as the Pyramids." (which are estimated to have been built no earlier than 2500

"Their boats were propelled by sails on yards and mast, as well as by oars. They used the blow-pipe in the manufacture of gold chains and other ornaments. They had rings of gold and silver for money and weighed it in scales of a careful construction."

"They frequently wore false beards. Sandals, shoes, and low boots, some very elegant, are found in the tombs. Women wore loose robes, earrings, finger-rings, bracelets, armlets, anklets, gold necklces. In the tombs are found vases for ointment, mirrors, combs, needles. Doctors and drugs were not unknown to them; and the passport system is no modern invention, for their deeds contain careful descriptions of the person, exactly in the style with which European travellers are familiar."

The Egyptians were the first people to weave linen. "This fine weaving has never been matched, even with the advanced machines used in textile mills today," according to Hamlyn Publishers. They also state "The Egyptians were the first people to have been known to draw maps, which would have been as early as 3000 B.C."

The doctrine of the immortality of the of the soul is as old as the inscriptions of the twelth dynasty. Knowledge of Egyptian civilization comes to us also through Plutarch, Herodotus, Diodorus and other Greek writers.

The Egyptians were also the first people to instate the worship of one single god. The god was called Aton, the years were between 1379 to 1362 b.c. and this rule was ordered by Egyptian Pharoah Akhenaton.

All the archaeological evidenced in and out of Egypt indicates that the original Egyptians were indeed African, of the Negro race, and only after subsequent millinems of development were Asian, Arab and Mediteranean peoples became part of the Egyptian kingdom. The Pharoahs that authorized the building of the great pyrimids, the great temple in Ciaro, and first and only library in the world, (at Alexandrea) were African. Most of these achievements were done prior to 2500 B.C.

AFRICAN AFFAIRS

DEATH STALKS UGANDA

Murders, robberies, and other instances of indiscriminate violence continue to plague Uganda, with shootings by armed uniformed persons reported daily in major towns such as Kampala and Jinja.

During the last weekend in August, in Kampala alone, unidentified persons killed twelve and injured thirty. The dead included two doctors from the city health department who stepped outside one of their homes to investigate a nearby burst of gunfire.

Ugandan President Godfrey Binaisa and the Uganda National Consultative Council have taken various steps to curb the violence. A month ago, soldiers were recalled to their barracks, and street patrols and the manning of roadblocks were handed over to police. The government has called for the turning in of unauthorized weapons and has helped local citizens organize vigilante groups.

By mid-August authorities began issuing identity cards and impounding cars without license plates and registration.

The problem seems never-ending, however, and the government's control of its own police and soldiers seems tenuous at best. This is illustrated by a recent Consultative Council directive that from now on soldiers and police should be forbidden to fire at random.

Although much of the trouble stems from the state of near chaos following the ouster of Amin, there is widespread speculation that the violence is organized rather then just apolitical haymaking by criminal element.

Admittedly, soon after the fall of Kampala, 4,000 prisoners were released, including persons convicted of theft and murder. And both weapons and uniforms, left in caches around they country by Amin's forces, have become common property, making in easy to impersonate authorized military or police personnel.

Proponent of the theory that at least some of the violence is politically motivated, however, point to an incident on August 28. On that evening two fuel trucks were found parked in the midst of the Nile Mansion hotel complex where a number of government officials live. According to official sources, a plot to blow them up with anti-tank rockets was uncovered just in time.

Some observers raise the possibility that the current reign of violence is being exploited, if not planned, by political opponents of President Binaisa. Sources variously suggest that followers of Idi Amin, of Yusufu Lule, or of Milton Obote-all former Ugandan presents-may be implicated.

Obote, the elected president ousted by Amin in 1971, supports current political developments in Uganda, however, and has said nothing against President Binaisa. He is believed by reliable sources to feel that the time is not right for his return from exile in Tanzania to live in Uganda, much less for his return to Ugandan politics.

The possibility of a new power bid by Amin is taken more seriously. President Binaisa has charged in recent weeks that Amin has recruited a 30,000-strong military force, now grouping in Zaire and southern Sudan in preparation for an assault on Uganda. Sudan denies it habors any such Amin units on its border.

Inside Uganda, a major part of the security efforts have been directed toward flushing out former members of the notorious Amin security police, the State Research Bureau.

Yusufu Lule, who served briefly as head of state following Amin's ouster, is also actively opposing the Binsisa government, but he is not suspected of having any significant military force behind him. In late July he was reported to be forming an opposition coalition, including a number of the more right-wing elements which joined the Uganda National Liberation Front (UNLF) at the Moshi Conference in March. It was to be called the Uganda Democratic Union and was to work first of all for the ending of Tanzanian influence and military presence in Uganda.

The Binaisa team has remained adamant, however, that no divisive political groups will be allowed to organize during the two-year interim period set out by the Moshi Conference. The UNLF itself is an extremely broad coalistion politically, based in an agreed need for unity in this period of transition. President Binaisa has warned that although there is room within the front for the development of many political tendencies, groups which cause division and challenge the unity principle will be banned.

HEAVYWEIGHT POLITICS?NBCwill probably televise from South Africa the October 20th, World Boxing Association heavyweight championship between South African Gerri Coetzee and John Tate, a black American, despite protests from both American and African groups.

Bob Arum, the fight promoter, promises that the stadium will be integrated for the fight. Groups opposing the event, including the American Committee on Africa, Jesse Jackson's PUSH and the NAACP, counter that this still serves South African interest, allowing the apartheid country to present a false face to the world.

The Supreme Council on Sport in Africa has warned that if NBC airs the fight African athletes will boycott the network's interviewers at the 1980 Olympics and that Arum will be barred from promoting fights in the rest of Africa.

PROFESSOR NGUGI WANTED BACK: Ngugi Wa Thion'o former head of the literature department at the University of Nairobi, was among several political detainees released nine months ago after the death of Kenya's former president, Jomo Kenyatta. Ngugi, however, has not yet returned to his job.

Univeristy authorities have reportedly tried to ignore his request for reinstatement despite repeated efforts on his behalf by the University Academic Staff Union, and the matter has now been raised in Parliament.

Although no reasons have been given officially, university faculty suspect that Ngugi's firm stands on matters of principle are part of the reason he is being snubbed. They reportedly interpret this as having serious implications for their own job security and consider it urgent that confidence be restored through his immediate reinstatement.

POLISARIO TAKES MOROCCAN TOWN: Morocco has admitted defeat for the first time in its war against POLISARIO independence guerrillas over the disputed Western Sahara. The occasion was a 24-hour occupation of Lebuirate, Morocco, by POLISARIO forces on August 24-25. Morocco maintains that it lost 125 soldiers. POLISARIO says the number was over 700. It is the third time in as many months that POLISARIO has attacked a town inside Morocco.

President Agostinho Neto of Angola, who won the civil war in his African country with the help of Soviet and Cuban troops, passed on last Monday night, September 11, in the Soviet Union, the official news agency Tass said Tuesday.

President Neto arrived in Moscow Sept. 6 on what was described as an unofficial friendly visit believed to be for medical reasons.

South Africa Starts a A New Nation

THOHOYANDOU, South Africa, Sept. 13 — The impoverished area of Venda, one of the regions that South Africa has designated as tribal homelands, was proclaimed an independent black nation today as part of the Government's policy of separate racial development.

To the booming of a 101-gun salute at a minute past midnight, Venda became the third area reserved for blacks to be declared independent by South Africa, which plans to establish a total of 10 black states, occupying 13 percent of its total area, reserving 87 percent for the white minority.

Similar status was granted to Transkei in 1976, and to Bophuthatswana in 1977. Venda has a population of 320,000.

Speaking at ceremonies here in a stadium built for the occasion, Venda's President-elect, Chief Patrick Mphephu, called for more land from the South African Government and recognition of its independent status from foreign countries. But recognition is unlikely to be extended. Only South Africa, Zimbabwe Rhodesia and Botswana were represented at today's independence ceremonies. The United States has refused to recognized the existence as independent nations of Transkei and Bophuthatswana, and Washington said today that it would not recognize Venda either.

THe New York Times/Sept. 14, 1979

Venda is third South African black area to be declared independent. Transkei received such status in 1976, and Bophuthatswana in 1977.

Half Size of Connecticut

Venda, in northeastern South Africa, is half the size of Connecticut, has a per capita income of $26 a month. Almost 70 percent of the male population works in South Africa, outside the region's area.

Last year South Africa provided about $36 million of Venda's $45 million operating budget and also paid $21 million to build governmental facilities in the new capital.

"We hold out the hand of friendship to all nations," Chief Mphephu said at the independence ceremonies, "and all we ask in return is noninterference in our internal affairs."

U.S. Refuses Recognition

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 (AP) — The State Department said today that the United States would not recognize Venda.

The department's spokesman, Hodding Carter 3d, said the area's independence was proclaimed "without reference to the wishes of the people in the area and does not constitute a viable solution" to South Africa's racial problems. "Therefore, we oppose it," he said.

EDITORIAL

Hello everyone and welcome to Nummo News. This year Nummo intends to be more comprehensive than it has ever been in covering all local, national, and international happening, past and present.

We intend to cover: campus Third World Leaders and activies, the Black American political elite and what they are doing for us, and what their goals are; the problem between Blacks and Jews; and other controversal issues.

We will cover the Drug abuse problem with black Americans; and we will search out the U.S. and international corporations doing business in the Third World.

We will bring in the African contribution to civilization, past and present.

Nummo News also will be a referal News service listing Third World community organizations and their services, concerts, lectures, theatre, courses, movies and dance within the Five College Community.

We are looking forward a to a worthwhile relationship with you this year.

As the students of UMass are about to embark upon a new semester and thus new learning experiences, there are several pressing problems which we all must ponder in order to acheive a more harmonious and productive school term. These problems do not necessarily concern only one segment of the campus population, but the entire student community. Ultimately all students are affected by its subgroups and factions. When UMass students work collectively towards enriching their intellectual cultural and socio–political consciousness, we will have made a giant step towards a more promising future.

The literary war waged last semester by members of various ethnic communities was filled with petty differences, but much of what was said was factual. I find it unfortunate that vital members of the community cannot reach beyond the minor consciousness barriers which have been placed upon them by the negative racist attitudes of American society. It is our responsibility to ourselves and our children to reject those attitudes and replace them with those of compassion, humanity, and understanding.

The political activities and trends which were set into motion last semester troubled me deeply. Many truly unjust events took place within the framework of the student government which must be revealed and analyzed by the campus community, overtly racist and discriminatory acts by a few of "our" elected officials, at both the area government level and S.G.A. We must confront those who use their political power and influence to achieve oppressive ends. This very vocal minority of officials are gifted at the use of gilt edged rhetoric to obscure their true in tentions. Why must they attempt this deceit? It is futile and counter productive to the harmony which is essential to our development, and well being within the framework of their institutions.

The answers to many questions which are pertinent to the Third World community can only be found within itself. We can no longer sit back in complacence and accept the gains and acheivements of our predecessors to remain intact and effective. No! It is our direct responsibility to develop an active spirit of work and obligation to each other, to ourselves, and to our community.

The strong holds which were fought for and protected by the strong brothers and sisters who were educated here in the past are now endangered primarily by our silence and nonuse. This painful reality must quickly be reversed by the self determination of each member of our community.

By tempering this active spirit with the Third World concept of love and solidarity towards oppressed people and people in general, we will help ourselves to become total human beings with objectives, outlooks and means for solving the ever present problems of UMass and humanity.

The Case Of BLACK ENGLISH

THE RECENTLY concluded "Black English" case in Ann Arbor, Mich.-has been the subject of much media attention and public concern. The case raised the kind of social issues that indeed the public should be concerned about. On the whole, media coverage of the issues presented was quite good and attempted to place before the public an accurate picture of what the case was about; yet, despite this generally accurate coverage, some reports were misleading.

Perhaps the most important point about the case which seemed to be misunderstood was the fact that the suit was not an attempt to have "Black English" taught in the schools. Instead it was, as Judge Charles Joiner identified in his opinion, and attempt to get the school system "to take appropriate action to teach (the plaintiff children) to read in the Standard English of the school, the commercial world, the arts science and professions."

TO DO THAT effectively, scholarly research has shown that educators must first be aware of the language "switching" that these children must perform, otherwise the children would more than likely simply not respond to instruction. The subtle psychological pressures affecting these students were not, and indeed could not, be overcome by well intentioned efforts on the part of teachers until those teachers were specifically made aware of the children's speech patterns.

On this point Judge Joiner noted the laudatory efforts of teachers at the King School but added, "By requiring a student to switch without even recognizing that he or she is switching impedes the learning of reading Standard English."

NO DUAL LANGUAGE PROGRAM

The parents and attorney's for the children only sought to have current scholarship taken into consideration in teaching Standard English to African-American children from low socio-economic settings so that these children too may one day enter the social and economic mainstream of American life. A dual language program would not meet that concern at all and indeed would be counter-productive to it.

THE ISSUE WAS much more complex than simply whether the children could understand their teachers or the teachers, the children. The vernacular identified as "Black English" is not so substantially different from Standard English that it cannot be understood. Likewise the children involved were not so infamiliar with Standard English that they could not use it and understand it, though not without difficulty, especially in the context of classroom reading and writing.

Instead, the more important point was that however unintentionally, attitudes were communicated to the children that they spoke a language form not only different but inferior to that of other students. The children were as a result, made to feel "dumb or stupid," thus further alienating them from instruction. The judge's opinion simply ordered the school system to recognize and then take steps to overcome this problem.

One rather inane comment, and this by an African-American journalist, reflects a profound misunderstanding of the issues involved in the case. To make the point that there is in fact no cause for concern over children who speak "Black English," the journalist asks rhetorically: "Have you ever seen a black child who couldn't understand TV•"

She then continues by making the observation that "If blacks couldn't by making the observation that "If blacks couldn't understand Standard English they would need an interpreter to apply for welfare benefits." Clearly she missed the point. African-American people aspire to more than simply understanding t.v. and collecting welfare benefits.

IN THE FINAL analysis, this suit was a continuation of the struggle for equal educational opportunity which began in the 40s even prior to Brown v. Board. Judge Joiner's decision recognizes that equal opportunity for some African-American children does not come solely through integration. Additional steps must be taken to assure that these children do in fact have as equal an opportunity to succeed in school as their fellow students. As Judge Joiner states in the court opinion:

The failure of the defendant board to provide leadership and help for its teachers in learning about the existance of Black English' as a home and community language of many black students and to suggest to those same teachers ways and means of using that knowledge in teaching black children code-switching skills in connection with reading Standard English is not rational in light of existing knowledge on this subject."

MEL KING MORE THAN A MEDIA IMAGE, A CANDIDATE

By Mike Thelwell, W.E.B. DuBois Depatrment Of Afro-American Studies

I have known Mel King since 1963, 64... the heroic days of the Civil Rights movement when he was head of the Boston Urban league. What's that fifteen, sixteen years• Through it all, the Movement, bussing crisis, Boston School Crisis, Viet Nam, Peace Movement, economic crisis, everything, Mel King has been in there. Quiet, decent, principled, effective, about the people's business. There is not a brother in the country I respect more... How in hell can we not support him..."

Mike Thelwell, Activist, UMass Professor, novelist.

On September 20th Boston, the city which supplies more of our students than any other, will hold its mayoral primaries. There is more reason than ever in the past for students from Boston, not only Blacks and other ethnic minorities, but all students, to be actively involved on that day. In many ways, the day is no different from past primaries. As is usual in our lifetime Kevin White will be running. So will his perennial opponent Joe Timilty. School Superintendent David Finnegan is a "new face" only because this is his first run at the job. In every other regard Finnegan is business as usual in Boston politics.

Tweedle dum, Tweedle dee, Tweedle doh. The Boston Press makes much of their similarities--"Irish Catholics from families active in traditional politics." But that is superficial. Their real similarities are not superficial but fundamental. They sound the same, campaign the same, avoid the same issues. The only difference in their campaign is the names of their public relations consultants and the money available for "slick media campaigns" and to "project the right image." White says he has a million dollars, the other two say they each have half that. They have all tried to say nothing that might offend any constituency and have succeeded only in saying nothing important or even memorable. With their battery of hired advisors, pollsters, and media consultants they have strived for the right image, jostled for position on the "right" of this issue or the "left" of the next, each elbowing desperately to displace the other in some mythical and safe "center." But this year there is a fourth "major" candidate, State Representative Melvin King. Although King has been a long time presence in Boston politics as a black man representing a racially mixed constituency, and who has demonstrated an ability to be elected despite any and varied opposition, his campaign was lightly regarded initially. A Boston Globe magazine assesment was typical of the opinion of the political "pros."

"Mel King...champion of the poor, of people of color, the elderly, the handicapped, homosexuals, women -- the disenfranchised, the ignored, the harassed, would be a real change. But it is doubtful that any black, bearded man who wears jump suits, shaves his head, and who looks you in the eye when he talks about race, will be major of Boston in this century no matter how sincere he may be..."

If that writer is right, what exactly is she saying about the Boston electorate and the state of politics in this nation• For King has campaigned hard and with great effect. In fact, of the major candidates, he can be said to have run the only real campaign. Even is he had wanted to--and no one observing his career goals marked by intelligent and principled seriouness over the years can believe he would have.--he could not have run a slickly package media hype. He simple hadn't the money. Nor did he get into the mud-slinging, charge-mongering, and name-calling that seems so inevitably a part of Boston's municipal politics. In June an editorial in a leading Boston Daily said, "Right now, the only announced candidate who seems to be refraining from posturing and trimming is Mel King. He's making sense without making noise..."

"...Mel King is a real person. He has a way of talking to people, getting through to them is he will listen he sounds as if he cares, and he seems free of the wiliness and sophistry of which some politicians are accused. He looks right at you and seems comfortable doing it as if he had nothing to hide..."BOSTON GLOBE MAGAZINE

King has brought dignity, energy, imagination and a reputation for impeachable honesty and a rock-hard personal integrety to this campaign. He and his staff, largely of volunteers, has developed and circulated a series of related postions on every issue affecting the city's future and the quality of life for its citizens, particularly the poor and powerless.

Within the framework of novel forms of economic development aimed creating jobs for the city's jobless, he has developed and circulated ideas which seem clear, sensible and certainly worth trying on such questions as: adequate livable low cost housing, Rent control, Food production in the city, protection of minorities women's rights, and community control of local government. With little money they took their message to the people wherever they could, block parties, street concerts, community meetings, into bars, clubs wherever two or three were gathered together. They had direct mailing and voter registration drives.

"While King's bluntness has given him a reputation for militancy, he is no wild-eyed radical. Years in the legislature serving the state's most ethnically and racially assorted constituency has given him a real understanding of the way things work. They have also given him time to build a political base easily and often underestimated. White challenged that base last year by supporting a candidate against King, who won easily despite the heavy black cross over into the republican primary in order to support the beleagured Edward W. Brooke."
Ken Hartnett, Boston Globe

There is no question that they have put together a campaign that is causing slight tremors amount the political orthodoxy. How effective a campaign• No one can say for sure until the election because it is so unusual in its simple, understated honesty and energy. In politics as in everything else, one committed and energetic volunteer is worth six time serving professional. All of which seems beyond the ten of the traditional Boston politicians. Kevin White is quoted as having said with his usual astuteness,

"Mel King King is erratic...you could say he is consistently unpredictable . He's a toughie to figure. Provocative. Competitive. King, I think he's trying to hurt me.."

I guess if someone were trying to take my job, and showing such seriousness and skill at it, I'd reach that conclusion too. Good thinking, Kevin. But to White with his million dollar campaign kitty and media blitz psychology, the King campaign might be a little hard to figure. A real "toughie." Especially since,

"King doesn't normally concern himself with tactics, or read election tables to calculate the impact of his actions. The real significance of his candidacy is the tone and style he will bring to the campaign. He approaches elections as an educational process. He will get voters thinking about the city they want to have. He is likely to ask questions about power. About who rules and by what right, and for what purposes. He will talk about the possibilities of doing things decently and he will not be on an ego trip. He will mean everything he says. He will be what Boston has not had in a long time, an alternative candidate."
Political Circuit, Boston Globe

So...can Mel King win• Conventional wisdom says he can't. But again, there are 50,000 blacks alone registered in the city and King's campaign has been concentrating on registering all the minorities they could. Then there are the coalition of progressive people and other minorities who have little reason to support the traditional candidate. The fact is that fewer and fewer American vote in any election. Municipal primaries in which there is no real emotional issue like Proposition 14, draw the fewest voters. The numbers that Mel King would need are not at all impossible. THIS IS WHY ALL PROGRESSIVE MEMBERS OF THIS COMMUNITY WHO ARE REGISTERED TO VOTE IN BOSTON SHOULD MAKE THE TRIP HOME TO VOTE. Blacks and minorities have a special obligation here, but so does any citizen of Boston who is tired of politics as usual. And even if you are not registered, you can help turn the vote in your communities. Look, on a shoestring and with the help of communities of deeply committed volunteers, Mel King has run a campaign that dignifies the whole process, and us all. Even if, as is entirely possible, he does not make the run off, if he were to do better than the professionals expect, then we will have won. The political power of the minorities and progressive people will have been enhanced. The monied interests, the builders of condiminiums and nuclear plants will be less secure...and there is always next time. We may not have to wait for the next century. That is why you should go home to Boston on the 20th.

"According to census-bureau statistics, the proportions of female-headed households among blacks rose from 28 percent in 1970 to 39 percent in 1978 among whites, the rate rose only from 9 percent to 11.5 percent. And among middle-class males, the black divorce rate runs more than double the white percentage."

"According to 1977 census data, there were 732,000 more black females than males within the 24-to-44 year old age group, and there has been a dramatic increase in interracial marriages, expecially between black men and white women. In 1960, there were 51,000 interracial couples, almost equally divided between blackmen " white women and black women " white men. By 1977, there were 125,000 interracial marriages, 95,000 of which were between black men and white women."

"Fueling the antagonism is the widespread belief among men that black females have both access to better jobs, and greater career mobility than black men. That is not really true. There are still more black men than women in thelabor force, and black women, with median incomes of $8,290 in 1977 remain at the base of the economic ladder. "Black women have moved from sub-bottom to bottom -- from charwomen, maids, cooks and housekeepers to clericals," explains Eleanor Holmes Norton, head of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. And many professional black women insist that while they are less threatening to their white male colleagues than black men, they still don't have any power. "You have no illusion you are going to take over," says Washingto Post reporter Jacqueline Trescott."

COURSE OFFERINGS

SW190V - Myth of the Disadvantaged
The goal of this course is to bring into focus the social engineering involved in labels such as "disadvantaged", "culturally deprived", and so on. This is accomplished by confronting hard, cold data with a fresh analysis to bear upon a large body of information that does not avoid the immense role that racism and imperialism have played in our language and in our lives. Serious students are invited and are expected to fulfill the following requirements: a midterm exam, an oral presentation based on individual or team study contrasting how people are defined and how the people define themselves, and a final project.
Wed 4:00-6:30 Malcolm X Center

SW191E - Race, Biology and Society
This course is a thoughtful excursion through the myths and realities of racial variation. Primary emphasis will be placed on biological variation including theories linking behavior and intelligence to genes, eg., race. The ways in which theories of race have changed through time with changing economic and political motives and the ways in which ethnic differences are treated in various societies will be discussed.
Mon 2:30-5:00 Malcolm X Center

SW190A - Afro-American Art - 1900's to the Present: Historical Development and Contemporary Practice
This course is designed to make the student aware of the various contributions of the Afro-American artist as well as creating original pieces of work. We will approach the subject with a historical look at who the artists were and from what climate their creativity emerged. The course is aimed towards students who are interested in a close look at the development of art in America and how Blacks have contributed qualitatively and quantitatively to the American art scene. A field trip will be arranged at the end of the sememster, so that students will be able to see examples of Afro-American art in this area. As a class project, students will be asked to create an original piece of work in a contemporary style discussed in class with the assistance of the instructor. No previous art background is required.

Excerpts from a speech commemorating Seta

As we all know, today a year ago Seta Rampersad was found dead in Motel 6 in South Deerfield;a; and yet after all this time, we do not know the exact cause of her death. What we do know is that the local judicial system has done a brilliant job of making sure that those responsible for her death have gotten away completely free. We are here to say today that there are literally thousands of people in this community and the surrounding communities who understand precisely what the local courts have done, and none of us like it. But even more important than this, today we are here to mourn Seta Rampersad. This is why we have brought her symbolic coffin to Northampton. We want everyone to see that when a sister of color dies unjustly, we refuse to let her die unnoticed and alone.

Although we mourn sincerely, the sadness of mourning isn't our only reason for being here. We also remember. We remember the ugliness of Seta's death, how three people , Jimmy the Greek, Brian Pitzer, Carol Newton-watched her die for eleven hours, dragged her around the motel room, threw her in the shower, but never once called for help. We remember the professional slickness of District Attorney Simons as he gave exscuse after excuse for not getting involved in the case. We remember that State Attorney General Bellotti still hasn't found time to respond to our request to reinvestigate what happened that night. Yes, we remember these things, and we know what they mean. They mean this: when a person of color or an ordinary working person or woman gets slaughtered, the people in power don't necessarily view this as an important event.

But there are other things that we remember too. For instance we remember how over the last year in Northampton and the surrounding areas many people stepped forward and said: "What happened to Seta and how the courts handled it-none of this was right."For a whole year, up until this very moment, people have been sending donations and information, have given moral support, and have in all kinds of ways offered to help keep the case alive. One man who is on social security sent us a check. We all know how little social security checks are,and yet this person said. "I heard about the case and I know the only way right can be done is to reopen it."I hope my little contribution can help."

To us that man represents the secret hidden power of this community. A lot of ordinary people seem to know that what happened to Seta was wrong, if only the courts and judges and DA had the intelligence that regular day-to-day people have, then we wouldn't be here at this moment raising our voices in sorrow and anger. The reality is that our collective sense of justice-of right and wrong is about 100 times more accurate than a whole courthouse full of District Attorneys with wads of cotton stuffed in their ears.

What we have to deal with is the fact that a few politically powerful people control the world we live in. If you or I do something that the law considers wrong, there's no doubt we would end up in jail; but if the powerful local elite that controls the purse-strings of this town decides to disregard the law, they'll undoubtedly do it and not get caught, for instance, if a local business person with strong connections to the courthouse here wants to enter the cocain trade and make a small fortune on the side, that is considered a fine wholesome American idea, but if you or I were to step even an inch out of line, we would be called the scum of the earth and thrown in Walpole for 20 years.

What law and order means these days is: laws to protect the powerful, and order for everybody else.

There are some people who know this very well. They have firsthand experience, for instance, Craeman Gethers is a black man who knows how law and order operates here in the Northampton area. Craeman Gethers has been in jail for over four years, for supposedly robbing a local MacDonalds with Earl Brown. The fact that there wasn't adequate evidence against him didn't matter, when one of the witnesses said she was sure that Craeman was the robber because he was the ugliest, black nigger she had ever seen, the court thought that was pretty good proof, and so Craeman Gethers went away to jail, for over four years.

Jill Dickenson is another person from the area who also knows how law and order works, now there are times when the court system is super energetic about throwing somebody in jail,but there are other times when the court system miraculously loses all its legal enthusiasm.

Jill Dickenson is a woman of color who was found seriously injured behind somes bushes on a wet April night over a year ago. Today Jill has a totally paralyzed right side and a speech impediment that resulted from her injuries. For the last year people have been saying that what happened to Jill Dickenson is this: she was raped and then tied behind a blue volkswagon and dragged down the street, and then when her attackers were done with her they dumped her in the grass. In this case, unlike in the MacDonald's incident, the police didn't jump to throw anyone in jail. As a matter of fact, the criminals completely slipped through the fingers of the law. But since the vitcim was a person of color and a woman, it didn't make much difference to the authorities-she was easy to forget.So Jill Dickenson remains paralyzed, but know one is in jail.

Such incidents can only lead us to one conclusion. The conclusion is this: that in certain situations the so called justice system works in one way, while in other situations it works differently. Throwing black people into jail on flimsy evidence is okay. But hunting down those who have committed crimes against black and other Third World people like Jill Dickenson and Seta Rampersad, that's something else it doesn't have the same kind of high priority.

This isn't just a local problem, and it's not just a problem of 1979. Ironically, on this very day that we are mourning and grieving for Seta, it is also the week of the 8th anniversary of the Africa rebellion and the subsequent massacre. In September 1971, Nelson Rockerfeller sent the state police into Attica Prison to blast a bunch of primarily black and Third World prisoners off the face of the earth. The prison yard was drenched in blood. Later, government reports indicated that Rockerfeller had indeed probably made a mistake, had probably chosen the wrong strategy for handling the situation at Attica, but no one sent Nelson Rockerfeller to prison. According to the prevalent system of justice, people like Rockerfeller aren't sent to jail. Instead, they try to run for President of the United States.

Like I said before: the problem here with Seta's case isn't just a local problem. It's national. But it's even more than national it even reaches beyond the borders of the United States. Let me use Rockerfeller again as an example. I'm from India and because of this I understand certain things about what Rockerfeller was like, what he stood for. The same Nelson Rockerfeller who has Blacks and Puerto Ricans and Native Americans, lower-class whites mass-murdered at Attica was also responsible (along with other people from his family) for sending teams of white professional people into Third World countries like India. The task these professionals had was to experiment on how to develop workable programs of forced sterilization. So: wherever people of color are, we have to watch out or else men like Rockerfeller and District Attorney Simons are bound to rip us off. None of this is a joke. It's a matter of life and death. It's a matter of fighting to survive or allowing ourselves to be crushed by the insane hammer f US law.

Well Nelson Rockerfeller is dead and maybe I shouldn't be picking on him. But one of the reasons we're here today is to say that mourning for people like Seta Rampersad is far more important than mourning for people like Nelson Rockerfeller. It's time we started shedding tears, not for the powerful who aren't the least bit interested in us, but for ordinary people like ourselves. Seta Rampersad was an ordinary person. Just like us, she was happy, sad, confused, strong, weak, and sometimes right and sometimes wrong. But there is also more. Seta Rampersad-a woman of color, a daughter of working people-traveled all the way from Trinidad in the Caribbean to Northampton, Massachusetts to die. In that journey is summed up the lives of literally millions of Third World people from colonialized countries. That's a long journey to take, just so you can end up dead in Motel 6 with all the local judges and district attorneys holding their hands in front of their eyes so they don't have to look, don't have to do anything, don't have to see. We're not in a mood to stay quiet about any of this. Seta Rampersad is in her coffin and we don't like it. Justice is in its coffin, and we don't like that either.

Like I said earlier, we have to mourn, but we also have to remember. We have to remember that justice is going to exist only if we make it exist. We have to remember that if we remain divided against ourselves in communities and workplaces and schools, then we aren't going to have any strength-we aren't going to be able to fight for what we believe in and win.

We're the ones who have to do it. We can't rely on anyone else. Certainly the typical politician isn't our friend or ally. It's almost funny how, when they're running for office, they give us all that beautiful rhetoric, but once they get elected and sit down in their plush chairs they immediately forget who we are. Simons is probably sitting in the courthouse now cleaning his fingernails or reading the New York Times' stock reports and patting himself on the back for having hustled himself into office. To men like that the death of a woman like Seta Rampersad is nothing. Such men climb to power on the strength of their ability to hide their shallowness and people-hatred behind piles of fancy words. But we all know that if Tom Simons had a daughter and she was found dead in Motel 6, he would turn all of western Massachusetts upside down throwing people in jail. Black and Puerto Ricans would be the primary targets. After that would come lower and working-class whites. That's the way the law works. That's the way men like Simons batter their way to the top.

Before I stop I want to say just a few more things.

Seta has been dead now for exactly a year and for almost a year many of us have been fighting against the injustice of how her case has been handled. On this, the anniversary of her death, it's necessary for us to state clearly what we've learned from our experience of trying to achieve justice in this case. One thing we've learned is that it's very tiresome to beat our heads against the brick wall of an unresponsive and biased legal system. Judge McGuane, District Attorney Callahan, District Attorney Simons, Attorney General Bellotti none of these men have displayed any inclination to overcome their white upper-class prejudices and deal with the case fairly. This is especially disappointing for all those people in the area who have signed petitions, written letters, given donations and helped in other ways to try to get justice done. But the fact is that in spite of these setbacks and disappointments, the case is still being pursued. In the near future our lawyers are going to file a civil suit in the public courts against Jimmy the Greek, Brian Pitzer and Carol Newton. We have good reason to believe that this civil suit will bring the case to a head and that it might result in a breakthrough. As in the past, we will continue to work with the lawyers and to raise the issue whenever necessary in the community and through the media.

But this isn't all we're going to do. The reality is that the time has come for us to spread out and increase our strength. We can't be satisfied with raising the question of Seta's death and then being quiet about other forms of injustice, discrimination, oppression and repression. The only proper way to mourn for Seta is to make her live on symbolically in the general struggle we are waging for true justice and true freedom. This struggle exists on many fronts. There are workplace problems, housing problems, daycare problems, continuing acts of violence against Third World people and women. In all of this, we see Seta. She is a symbol of what happens to us under the name of oppression. Seta is our child, our friend, someone who was struggling in the Americas just like us to be somebody. But they came in and ploughed her over and tried to bury her forever. But we are here today to say that they can't get rid of her. What we are doing at this very moment is strange and powerful. We are symbolically opening Seta's coffin and taking her out. We are saying to our local politicians and courts: "Seta is alive and you will live to regret the day you tried to hide what happened to her."In Seta's name, we are going to build a strong political blockade of people ready to fight for local justice. Both those of us from the Third World Women's Task Force and the Committee Against Repression are in this fight to the end. Anyone else who wants to work with us is more than welcome. We don't believe in fragmentation. We don't believe that we need professionals to lead us. We don'tbelieveinthepitfallsofbackbitingandpettyinfighting. What we believe in is joining together. All of us here today as well as many others in the surrounding communities are strong people who know what it means-and how important it is-to collect ourselves together into a single powerful force. And that's exactly what we plan to do. We plan to make ourselves heard.

This is how we will continue to mourn for Seta. This is how we will grieve over her death.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy D-Mass. will announce his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States. The announcement is expected between Oct. 20 to Nov. 17, said Greg Jarboe, of the Massachusetts chapter of the Committee for a Democratic Alternative in 1980.

Locally, Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, is organizing support for Kennedy in the 1st Congressional District. There will be a meeting for Kennedy organizers Sept. 21 at a yet undetermined Amherst location.

Jarboe, a staffer for Committee coordinator Sen. Sharon Pollard, D-Methuen, said he expects the announcement will be made in the Senate caucus room of the Capitol in Washington, where the senator's brothers, John and Robert, announced their presidential aspirations.

Senator Kennedy

Jarboe termed the place of declaration as "continuing an historical precedent" in announcing a Kennedy candidacy to the nation.

When asked why the Massachusetts effort is termed the Committee for a Democratic Alternative, Jarboe said, "In order to raise more funds under Federal Election Commission restrictions, we have chartered ourselves in this manner."

Jarboe explained that under commission laws, an individual contributor to a named candidate's committee may only give $1,000, while $5,000 may be given to a political committee working for no specific candidate.

In addition to Kennedy, Jarboe said the committee is considering the possibility of supporting Sen. George S. McGovern, D-South Dakota, and Congressman Morris K Udall, D-Idaho.

Nationally, polls give Kennedy a lead over President Carter for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination, and a top presidential aide says Carter's low rating reflects his courage in facing tough issues.

But, House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill says he does not believe Kennedy will run against the president, and Republican presidential hopeful George Bush says Kennedy, because of a reputation as a big spender, will lose if he challenges Carter.

Carter's chief domestic affairs adviser, Stuart Eizenstat, said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation" the president's decisions on such questions as the decontrol of oil prices and the Panama Canal were "not necessarily popular, but they were right."

President Carter

He also said the American people are venting their frustration over rising inflation on all institutions — including the president.

O'Neill said Sunday, "I truly believe, as I'm talking here, that Jimmy Carter's the candidate for the presidency and that Ted Kennedy's not the candidate."

O'Neill, speaking on WOR Radio's, "Newsbeat" program in New York, said of reports that Kennedy is moving closer to announcing his bid: "I still have to take in on good faith that he is not a candidate."

O'Neill also dismissed speculation Carter would withdraw from the contest, saying he worked hard for the presidency. He called the president "a very determined person" who will "ultimately win again."

Elaborating on his views yesterday on why he thinks Kennedy won't run, O'Neil said, "The Kennedy people are the most organized people in the world. He'd be out there. He'd be organizing people in the field, and he just isn't doing it as far as I can see."

O'Neill said he has not discussed the subject with Kennedy for 10 weeks, but he has spoken to people close to the senator, and "I know of none of them who has any direct knowledge whether he intends to run."

Bush said on a New Bedford news program of Kennedy: "His leadership has never been tested. He's never run anything. I think if he challenges Carter, the president will beat him."

D.C.s used as study areas

Reserve reading opens

A reserve reading room at the Goodell Library is scheduled to open today, and students seeking campus study areas, can also use two dining commons made available last night.

The reserve room open 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. can be entered through the south side of the Goodell building in the entrance near Bartlett Hall, reference librarian Paula Mark said. The reserve room is two flights up from the South entrance.

The library staff is working towards a Sept. 24 opening of all Goodell library facilities, but announcement can not be made until more work is completed and the building is about to open, Mark said.

"A whole army of people are working to get the building ready," she said.

Representatives from the DAniel O'Conner's Son's firm, which built the 28-story library in 1973, were on campus yesterday conducting tests on the facade of the building, UMass New Bureau Chief Arthur S. Clifford yesterday said.

The firm was conducting the tests at the request of the Boston-based Bureau of Building Construction, which

No freeze for heating oil costs

WASHINGTON [AP]— Two major U.S. oil companies told Congress yesterday they can't endorse President Carter's request for a freeze on heating oil prices and a third refused to testify.

Both Gulf and Sun Oil companies told the House Government Operations Committee's energy subcommittee that, while they plan to hold prices as low as possible, they can't make any promises.

A Gulf official said a mild winter might actually mean a slight drop in consumer prices from the record high current levels of around 80 cents to 83 cents a gallon. But he cautioned congressmen against being overly optimistic.

The holdout, Texaco, was immediately threatened with a subpoena. The subcommittee scheduled a session today to determine whether the firm should be forced to appear.

Texaco previously announced it intends to freeze heating oil prices this winter — winning the praise of the president, who held Texaco up as a standard for the industry.

Logan jet forces landing

BOSTON (AP)— An Air Canada jetliner with 42 persons on board returned to Logan Airport today after experiencing "an explosive decompression" while cruising 25,000 feet over the North Atlantic. The plane landed safely but a stewardess was slightly injured, the airline said.

"The pilot noticed that the tail cone was missing after they landed," said Jack Campbell, programs officer in the control tower at Logan.

The DC-9 was 11 minutes into a midday flight from Boston to Yarmouth and Halifax, Nova Scotia, when the pilot noticed the plane was depressurizing, the airline said.

The plane, flight No. 680, landed safely just before 1 p.m..

"The cabin became depressurized, so the captain decided to return to Logan," said Air Canada spokesman Steve Pisni.

He attributed the emergency to "trouble with the tail cone," which is the section at the rear tip of the plane. Pisne, in New York, said he did not know specifics of the problem.

He said the craft was about 60 miles east of Logan when the trouble developed.

NE homeowners to buy oil on credit

By JOANNE D'ALCOMO
Associated Press

BOSTON — New Englanders will be able to buy their home heating oil with "plastic money" this winter under an agreement between the nation's third largest commercial bank and the region's fuel dealers.

The New England Fuel Institute, which represents 1,100 dealers, and the Chase Manhattan Bank of New York have reached a tentative agreement allowing consumers to charge their oil on Mastercharge and Visa, according to James Garrett, an institute member who helped forge the arrangement.

If approved by the institute's board of directors as expected this week, it would be the first time that large numbers of consumers would be able to buy heating oil with their credit cards, which charge 12 to 18 percent annual interest on unpaid balances.

Customers of New England fuel dealers who decide to join the plan would be eligible to use their Mastercharge and Visa cards for heating oil, said Garrett, president of Volta Oil Co. of Plymouth.

Historically banks have not allowed credit cards to be used for basic needs such as rent, groceries and heating oil because of the potential impact on consumer debt.

But now that the price of fuel oil has doubled in the past two years, and both dealers and consumers are faced with stricter payment terms for oil, a few banks decided to explore alternatives to the traditional methods of payment.

"The fact that we're actually campaigning to increase the consumer debt bothers a lot of the banks," Garrett said.

Heating oil dealers like the use of credit cards because it helps them meet their suppliers' new, stiff payment terms, precipitated by the high cost of oil. Under the credit card system, the bank pays the dealer immediately for the oil that is charged, then collects from the customer.

Chase will make most of its money in the arrangement by charging the dealers a percentage of the credit purchase, according to David Schwartz, a second vice president at Chase Manhattan. Banks which hold the customers' cards get a smaller percentage, and also collect interest on the unpaid balances.

Chase Manhattan has experimented with the use of credit cards for heating oil on a limited scale in New Jersey, and at least one small Massachusetts fuel dealer offered the arrangement to his customers and discovered that few chose the option.

"It's something that has never been promoted or has had much success in the past," said Schwartz.

Schwartz said the bank, which has two million Visa card holders on the East Coast, including many in New England, plans to publicize the concept.

Heating oil dealers and Chase Manhattan say the plan could lead to the creation of a separate "energy card" that might have a higher credit limit, greater availability and different payment terms than Mastercharge and Visa.

"The Mastercharge and Visa structure is really not set up for a household necessity such as fuel oil. It is structured for pleasure, leisure or a one-time purchase item," said Garrett.

"We're looking at this as an interim measure," he said.

Schwartz said the bank is uncertain what impact the plan will have on the growing burden of consumer debt. The average credit limit on Mastercharge and Visa ranges from $1,000 to $1,500, and the average balance is $500, according to Schwartz.

"The only problem I can foresee is if there's a cold winter, it could eat up the credit very quickly," he said..

"It could defeat the whole purpose and put somebody deeply into debt."

FTC may face restraints

By JEFFREY MILLS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON —Outside the Federal Trade Commission stands a larger-thanlife statue of a man putting a bridle on an unruly horse. It conjures up an image of federal regulators restraining business excesses.

But now the FTC itself may face a bridle — with Congress doing the restraining.

Controversy over the FTC's aggressive regulation, especially since consumer advocate Michael Pertschuk became its chairman in 1977, has Congress considering a variety of ways to tighten the reins on the agency. An extensive series of Senate hearings that begin today and will run for weeks may have a lot to do with how the FTC survives its challenge in Congress.

"The complaint is that they are over-regulating, that they are trying to get into everybody's business," said Sen. Wendell H. Ford, D-Ky., who will chair the hearings at which more than 40 witnesses are scheduled to testify.

"Funeral directors, used car dealers, people who put on children's advertising — the list is very long. The FTC has made decisions affecting all these industries and many more. Every time they do, it imposes an additional burden on industry and they don't like it," Ford said in an interview.

Ford, who has earned the nickname "Iron Bucket" from his colleagues for his habit of keeping hearings in session all day with no break for lunch, promises more long hearings on the FTC. He says the Commerce subcommittee hearings will go into FTC operations in greater depth than any congressional oversight hearings in years.

"I'll sit there and listen to all of the arguments pro and con. If the subcommittee decides to make some changes in the structure of the FTC, we'll have a record to substantiate these changes," Ford said.

Many of the business groups that will appear at the hearings have been urging strong measures to halt the FTC's consumer-protection momentum that have caused severe headaches for businesses.

Proposals, already offered in either the House or the Senate, that will be aired at the hearings would:

—Give either house of Congress veto power over FTC regulations. The House has approved such provisions repeatedly but so far the Senate, backed by President Carter, has balked.

—Halt payments to outside groups for the costs of participating in FTC hearings. Critics say this program subsidizes people who agree with the FTC, but the commisioners say the funding lets them hear all view-points.

Halt FTC consideration of a regulation of children's television advertising. The commission was accused of making itself a "national nanny" by considering the regulation that, in its final form, could ban some commercials to young children.

An additional Capitol Hill challenge to the FTC came last week as a House panel tentatively approved a ban on the commission's major antitrust investigations of the auto and oil industries. The panel also would ban further FTC consideration of regulations over such diverse areas as health spas, hearing aids, over-the-counter drugs, mobile homes and protein supplements.

The FTC was one of the first federal regulatory agencies when it began in 1914. Then, as now, its goal was to protect consumers from "false and deceptive trade practices."

Dormitory security starts centralization

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Centralization of dormitory security is underway this semester, according to Director of Security Gerald T. O'Neil.

Since the 1960's, dormitory security has been on a dorm-to-dorm basis, according to James Fitzgerald, and administrative assistant in the department of security and coordinator of dormitory security.

"My intentions are to make it better and better, tighter and tighter," Fitzgerald said.

About 300 students with work-study clearance, will be hired for the program. The program's office will be based in Dickinson Hall, where the UMass Department of Security is based.

Dormitory security is budgeted $108,000—$28,000 from the Office of the Community Development Center and $80,000 from the Office of Residendtial Resource Management, office spokespersons said.

To the $108,000, and additional 80 percent of the total funds, $432,000 is added from state funding to accommodate the work-study funding, said Director of Residential Resource Management Robert L. Campbell.

"Our intent is to provide the type of security the dorms desire," O'Neil said last week of the program. "Hopefully, by being associated with this we will be able to provide better security in the dorms."

All student security guards will participate in a two-hour training session with representatives from the Office of Environmental Health and Safety and UMass security and the Housing Security Office, Fitzgerald said.

According to Fitzgerald, the long-range plan for security is to "gradually increase the security, so the serious student can study."

Campbell said his office is forwarding the $80,000 to the Department of Security in order to decrease campus vandalism.

"If the program is working and effective, it ought to cut the damage by half, at least," Campbell said. "In essence the program will pay for itself because we will not have paid the dollars" to repair dormitory abuse, he said.

Campbell estimates it will take a year to evaluate whether the new approach to security in the dormitories is effective. "If we see trends of wildness and abuse we will have to modify our stand," he said.

WMUA marks 30th year

By JOE GANNON
Collegian Staff

It will be thirty years ago next month when the world first heard radio transmissions from UMass via WMUA. And, according to news Co-director Fred Winer, "Some of the equipment is still here."

WMUA, at 91.1 FM broadcasts from Marston Hall through a transmitter perched atop Orchard Hill.

Although a student-run station funded through the Student Activities Trust Fund, it is not a "campus station," said Jeff Stein, Music Director. News stories and public affairs shows deal with both campus and community issues, Winer said. Feedback to the stations' programming is received from as far away as northern Vermont and southern Connecticut, he said.

WMUA is licensed through the Federal Communications Commission, which requires that all technicians and disc jockeys hold third-class licenses, Winer said. As of last March, a written test is no longer required to receive a license. Aspiring disc-jockeys must apply for a license from the commission, Winer said.

WMUA's first 'jock' recruitment meeting had 60-70 people show up, all hoping to get air time, he said.

Interested d.j.'s must be willing to work behind the scenes while learning the ins and outs of programming, Stein explained.

After training, d.j.'s may occassionally replace professionals who can not make their shifts. Once air time is assigned, the new d.j.'s must contend with "graveyard shifts," when they must work into the early morning hours. After that, it is just a matter of waiting for a better time slot to open up.

There is more to radio than being a d.j., Winer said. There are those away from the microphone that write news, sports and weather, and the people who prepare public affairs programs, technicians, management, and engineers. While many are willing to opt for the glamour of being a d.j., there are never enough people in production, Winer said.

WMUA is a non-commercial station, which frees it of the many confines faced by commercial radio stations, Stein said. One of the benefits of being a commercial-free station is the extra time available for public affairs programs and a greater diversity of shows, said wmua Program Director Eric Myers.

One aspect of WMUA's diversity is the amount of time dedicated to the Black Mass Communications Project. The

Amherst ok's Fonda, Hayden

By SEAN HARVEY

A special application for the Sept. 30 Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden appearance in the Curry Hicks Cage was approved last night by the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

The UMass program required special approval by the town committee.

The selectmen also approved a second location for Watroba's Store on North Pleasant Street. The added site will be on Sunderland Rd. in North Amherst. The new store will sell only beer and wine.

Also passed was a water supply agreement with Belchertown, in which Amherst will install water pipes in Belchertown.

A request by Yellow Sun Natural Foods for a loading zone next to their loading dock was placed on next week's agenda.

On the town warrant, the selectmen applied for a cities grant. The selectmen are requesting $300,000 from the federal government under the Community Development Block Grant. The money would probably be split between two programs, selectwoman Nancy Eddy said.

Part of the money would go out to homeowners as low-interest home-improvement loans. The other part would be used to build community and dining areas in the Congregate Housing for the Elderly, Eddy said.

The selectmen discussed the pros and cons of a new law under which public officials would be required to disclose all their personal finances.

"The Board is somewhat hesitant to be in agreement with state mandating financial disclosure," selectman Roger Jacques said.

NBC peacock 'not so proud'

Editor's note: this is the second in a three-part series on the fall television season.

By ROD CARVETH
Collegian Staff

NBC, which lost $35 million last year is counting on network President Fred Silverman to improve its entertainment schedule. Silverman however, ran the unsuccessful $12 million classic Supertrain last spring, and has further put himself in a bind by boldly predicting NBC would be back on top by Christmas 1980.

Silverman will be relying on a "tent-pole" programming strategy, which involves scheduling his most-popular shows at 9 p.m. and building the rest of the lineup around them. Silverman's "tent-poles" include: Sunday -- The Big Event with movies such as MacArthur, American Graffiti and The Outlaw Josey Wales, and mini-series, such as The Martian Chronicles; Monday and Tuesday -- movies, many in two-parts such as Semi-Tough, Coming Home and Dog Day Afternoon; Wednesday -- Different Strokes and Hello Larry, two holdover comedies; Thursday -- Quincy, starring Jack Klugman; Friday -- The Rockford Files with James Garner; and Saturday -- holdover BJ and the Bear, which features the adventures of a trucker and his chimp.

Silverman's other returning shows include two in the spring -- Kate Columbo, starring Kate Mulgrew as the amateur detective wife of everyone's favorite rumpled raincoated-sleuth and Real People, featuring unusual and often humurous everyday people.

The perennial Wonderful World of Disney and NBC's only top 20-rated show, Little House on the Prairie, will also be aired.

This leaves Silverman with a lot of programming holes to fill. And, his fillers do not appear too attractive.

Prime Time Sunday, starring Tom Snyder, will be NBC's newsmagazine answer to CBS's 60 Minutes. The show debuted this summer, and did well enough to merit a further shot. To do so, it will have to garner a loyal and persistent audience. The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo, a comedy spin-off from BJ and the Bear, starring Claude Akins as a slightly corrupt southern sheriff, airs in the 8 to 9 p.m. slot on Tuesdays.

Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, which may prove to be the*Batman* of the 1980's, and Shirley, starring Shirley Jones in a show that could be titled The Partridge Family Without David Cassidy, occupy the 8 to 9 slots on Thursday and Friday, respectively.

Eischied, a police drama starring JoeDon Baker, may be NBC's best bet this fall. The series spins off from the highly-rated, four-hour movie To Kill a Cop and airs Friday at 10 p.m., when it will have a strong lead-in from The Rockford Files. The other NBC offerings include From Here to Eternity: The War Years, continuing the mini-series based on James Jones' novel (Wednesdays at 10 p.m.) and A Man Called Sloane, starring Robert Conrad as a secret agent in the tradition of James Bond (Saturdays at 10 p.m.).

Given these seemingly unappealing programs, all Silverman can hope for is to be able to hold on to the Summer Olympics. As Johnny Carson said in an opening monologue: "The NBC peacock looked at the fall schedule -- and he's not so proud."

Pope's visit may become a holiday

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Edward J. King yesterday filed a bill that would make Oct. 1, the day of the Pope John Paul II's visit to Boston, a half-day holidav.

The bill, which has the backing of Senate President William M. Bulger, D-Boston, and House Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn, is expected to be approved by the Legislature without difficulty.

Schools, and state and municipal offices would be closed after 1 p.m. on Oct. 1, under the legislation.

King said the state's blue laws, requiring stores to close on Sundays and holidays, would be suspended on that day so that businesses could remain open.

Private employers would not be affected by the bill, although many companies in Boston are expected to send their employees home early because of the huge crowds that are anticipated.

King said he decided on the half-holiday in order to make the pope's visit "as joyful, safe and pleasant for everybody as we can."

VSO against Senate deficit

To the Editor:

It should be brought to the attention of the students of UMass that when we, the "NAM" veterans, blasted the Senate on the 12th of September the main objective was to stop the Senate from pushing off their $178,617.77 deficit on all the students at UMass.

If my math is correct, that is $7.00 a head for all of us.

It appears that most student organizations are going to lie down and accept the 15% cut in their funding.

We choose to argue about it and encourage all others to join in the battle at the next Senate meeting.

English 'blatantly callous' to Irish

To the Editor?

The "Smeared-on" editorial of Thursday the 13th, due to Peter Smerdon's ignorance and unrealistic attitude, reflects the blatant callousness with which the English government has dealt with the situation throughout history.

Mr. Smerdon seems to think that the IRA is fighting merely for the sake of irritating the English, and that, should they stop and talk peace, the English would consider withdrawing troops. Does he not understand that the IRA, by its name, considers this a war in defense of their right to enjoy a unified homeland, and that the English have no intention to allow such a close, restless neighbor to be released from its control? Granted, it makes military sense to keep Ireland bonded to the British Empire because of many European wars, but should the peace of an entire people be held in the hands of such an insensitive and incapable government? In the past, few English rulers have shown any leniency or respect to the Irish nation. Mrs. Thatcher has made clear that the IRA can expect no leniency under any circumstances.

Mr. Smerdon admits that the British are causing more strife in Northern Ireland than they prevent, and still shows polls that say both Catholics and Protetants in the area wish the troops to stay. Of course! Even the English recognize the blood-bath that both sides would face by a sudden removal of troops, but there are other methods. It is by no means a simple situation, but Mr. Smerdon and the English do not admit its complexity.

Mr. Smerdon states that every Catholic-American should be silent or leave for Derry (or Londonderry as the English, in their attempt to rape Ireland of her historical identity, renamed the once peacefully quiet city) to kill or be killed. Perhaps, since Mr. Smerdon seems to hold fast to his convictions, the same should be said of English exchange students. Or perhaps Mr. Smerdon should grow up and learn that political change in a small nation, Ireland, may hopefully be effected by some pressure exerted by a super-power, the U.S. on one of her allies, England. Perhaps those fires that have been fed by American sympathizers might not have reached such intensity had it not been for such long-term British injustice in Northern Ireland.

I am not supporting nor have I supported the radical element of the IRA, but at least I understand what they stand for. Mr. Smerdon's simplistic declaration caused every part of my being to be insulted, as it should likewise affect every Irishman, Irish-American, and anyone of any nationality who understands the situation in Northern Ireland and believes in justice! Mr. Smerdon's demand for silence shows his fear of international recognition of the Irish crisis.

Santis anti-Islam, contends letter

To the Editor:

I am writing this article to deplore the "false image" about Islam as published in the Collegian issue of September 10, 1979 by Yitchak Santis.

First of all, it is obvious from this article that Mr. Santis is anti-Islam and was speaking from a pro-Zionist mentality that hates Arabs and Muslims.

Mr. Santis focused on a few aspects of teachings The Prophet Mohammed (peace be upon him) had inflicted upon Jews due in fact historically to the birth of his religion and state.

Mr. Santis said that the Prophet (pbuh) had forced Jews to convert to Islam, facing eviction from Madina and physical extermination. First of all, The Prophet (pbuh) didn't do that following the orders of God (LA IKRAHA FEDDEEN). This phrase means that people have the right to choose their religion (if they are not Muslims) mentioning people of the book, especially Jews. Also Mohammed used to ask them gently if they wanted to be Muslims and if they did not, they were free to be Jews, but because they were under the Islamic government at that time, they were required to pay a "security fee" JIZYA.

Furthermore, the Jews did not have to serve in the army, in case of war with neighboring tribes. I don't see what is wrong with paying a small amount of money (tax) for one's protection, especially in the case of the Jews who were a minority.

I would think strongly that this solution was the right solution!

Now we are, as foreign students in the United States, a minority group, and we pay as much for our schooling here, at least three times Mr. Santis and other students pay for the same education.

Mr. Santis mentioned a funny statement that the so-called "Israel" is democratic and secular. "Israel" is, by definition, a Jewish State, established for the Jewish people; it can not, therefore, be a secular state. Furthermore, a state which allows and even supports discrimination against a large portion of its population (Palestines and Oriental Jews) can not be called democratic.

Doesn't Mr. Sanits know that Zionism is described as racism by the United Nations and furthermore, does he not know or has he not heard that the Jews are trying to destroy the Islamic Culture in Palestine? Did they not burn apart of AL AQSA MOSQUE on August 20, 1969?

Again, I still believe that the so-called "Israel" should not exist as a Jewish State without considering the civil rights of four million Palestinians and their self-determination, consequently there will be no stability, security, or peace. Sadat, Begin and Carter will not be able to solve the sophisticate situation if the Palestinians are not permitted to possess a strong sense of self-determination.

Resent classical music jokes, puns

To the Editor:

As Classical Music Lovers, we highly resent Beethoven's 3rd Symphony being (presumably) misprinted as "EROTICA" in Alan Potofsky's article on page 5 in the Sept. 10 Collegian. We also resent Classical Music Lover jokes, such as "Haydn go seek", "I'll be Bach in a fugue minuets" and "Handel with care", or making derogatory remarks about musical greats such as Joe Green (Giuseppe Verdi).

In addition, we do not like to be stereotyped as persons with such a narrow range of musical interests, as we enjoy listening to not only Classical, but a wide variety of Pop (Rock, Rock'n'Roll, Punk, New Wave, Heavy Metal, Disco) and a good deal of Jazz (Dixieland, Blues, Swing, Bop, Mainstream, and Fusion).

In closing we might add that as you can "Telemann by his music", so can you tell a journalist by his puns.

They try anesthetizing the way that you feel

Jon Hensleigh and Tom Malone

Welcome, fun-seekers. Our comment for today is directed solely at Freshmen. My young friends, you represent the hope of the future, naive and unjaundiced from the intellectually debilitating social life of this university. The rest of you can don your ZOOMass t-shirts, perfunctorily attend your required rhetoric courses and spend Thursdays dropping sniggering innuendos andout the amount of beer you are going to consume this coming weekend.

Now let's get down to business. The fact of the matter is: you are inferior. Are you appalled at our temerity? Can't you acknowledge your inferiority? By attending this university, you will receive an inferior education. It is not our intention to denigrate the UMass professorship. They are doing all they can to educate you. Your inferior education will occur outside of the classroom; at the dining commons, at the coffee shop, in your dormitory room.. That's right, your dormitory room. You're not satisfied with the 21st floor of J.Q.A.? Well, you can always take a human awareness colloquium and learn to say "women" instead of "girls" and "gay people" instead of "homos." That will make you equal, if not superior to all the virile and socially unaware Ivy League sexists and queer-bashers.

If you get bored, you can make a packy run for three cases of beer, or run three miles a day, or play pinball for three hours.

Dinner's always fun.

Four hundred Philistines hunched over plates of Meatloaf Italiano. You can grab chicken cutlets for seconds as you sneer at the "long-hairs" shuffling into basics for their vegetarian diets.

Sure, sure. They drink beer and play pinball and run three miles a day at Amherst and Harvard and Smith. But they're different, friends. They're rich, or smart, or both. And they don't do it like we do it here. They don't rape their dormitories; they don't quote Star Trek on their library walls.

Then again, they don't get budget cuts in the humanities or have brick-launching libraries. They don't have business schools which turn out calculator-toting drones and technocrats who long to fill the states two-bit corporate slots. They are not treated as inferiors.

And in four years maybe half of you will graduate, and maybe you Engineering and Business Majors will get jobs. But you'll still be inferior. Inferior because you were gypped. Gypped by budget cuts and business schools and neanderthalic roommates, by rancid living conditions and cultural sterility, by touchy-feely social-awareness types and EarthFoods.

And your auspiciously started post-secondary education will be a joke.

Jonathan Hensleigh & Thomas Malone are Collegian guest columnists.

project is alloted about one-quarter of the station's air time, said Bari Njiri, project member and station d.j. Njiiri explained that because WMUA is limited with only one Associated Press teletype the project tries to keep the Third World community informed on news and public affairs particularly relevant to them.

Although the Project is frequently overlooked, it draws support from a wide variety of listeners who enjoy jazz, rhythm and blues, gospel, regae, and blues, Njiiri said.

WMUA is typical of many UMass Recognized Student Organizations, in that it is troubled by budget problems. In 1974, WMUA's budget was $54,000, Meyers said. It has been decreasing steadily ever since, and last year it hit a low of $32,000, he said. The 1979-80 budget is $52,000, of which $13,000 goes to a full-time professional engineer to fix and replace equipment. Meyers said WMUA is still short of funds.

Part of the station's financial problem lies in the fact that there is no one on the Student Budget Committee with the technical know-how to understand the cost of running a full-time, year-round radio station, Meyers said. He said he feels that under-funding WMUA does a disservice to the student body who support the station through their SAXX fee. Insufficient funds means less coverage of local news and an incomplete record library, he said.

The lack of proper equipment means less live coverage of concerts, and interviews with visiting celebrities, he said. Also, the management board, forced to economize, has had to drop publication of a program guide.

oversees some UMass buildings, Clifford said.

Hampden dining commons in the Southwest Residential Area and Worcester Dining Commons in the Northeast Residential Area are being used for study areas, Food Service Aurthur H. Warren said. The commons opened last night for the first time. They will be open nightly from 7:30 to midnight for an undetermined period length.

Service officials will be monitoring the study areas to determine the areas' progress, Warren said.

Worcester and Hampden were chosen because the lighting there is better than at Berkshire, Franklin and Hampshire Dining Commons, Warren said.

If overcrowding proves to be a problem, better lighting systems will be installed in the other dining commons so they can also be used, Warren said.

A place called Alpha
and what you can do there

JEFF FORMAN - Instructor

Scientists have recognized that there's a special functioning level of the brain where the mind operates in an extremely high, intuitive, creative, and expanded capacity.

They've called this level Alpha.

The goal of Alpha Awareness is to help you learn to consciously function in Alpha at will, wherever and whenever you decide.

So you can expand your talents, improve your skills, develop your psychic abilities, effect positive changes in your personality, and correct disturbing bad habits.

In short, to allow you to function as a superior human being.

We help you to learn basic techniques you can use to make virtually any life situation easier to deal with. From handling your son's poor homework to handling your boss' impossible deadlines to handling your nose's allergic reaction to cat hair.

We help you to learn to apply these techniques to insomnia, smoking, headaches, poor memory and overweight.

With these techniques you can learn to rule your body by controlling your mind. They are a means to becoming healthier. And more vital. And happier.

A course called Alpha Awareness
and how it works

The course itself takes four evenings and one weekend to complete. Most people take them back to back. But you can do it separately according to your own time slots. And once you've graduated you can sit in on future sessions as often as you like, free.

If you're interested but not convinced or want to know more, we run seminars in this area for free where you can find out just what goes on here in more detail.

And you're invited to get real tough with us with your questions. The atmosphere is friendly and we can take it.

Dress is informal and loose all the time. You wear whatever makes you feel comfortable and relaxed.

Are you ready for a place called Alpha?

See you there.

Catfish honored

NEW YORK (AP) - Catfish Hunter, who will retire at the end of the season, was honored with a special day at Yankee Stadium Sunday.

Hunter, 33, was presented with a check for the Diabetes Foundation by Murray Chass, the president of the New York chapter of the Baseball Writers Association of America. He also received a plaque from Oakland Tribune plus newspaper clippings of his years with the Oakland Athletics; a matching set of leather luggage presented by Reggie Jackson of the Yankees; two shotguns; four cameras; a television presented by Lou Piniella; a pickup truck presented by Graig Nettles and a trip to Hawaii for Hunter and his family.

Hunter pitched 15 years in the American League, the last five with the Yankees. He pitched seven years with the Oakland Athletics and three years with Kansas City A's, both teams owned by Charles O. Finley. He has won 224 games and lost 166. Five times he won 20 or more games. He is 4-3 in the playoffs and 5-3 in the World Series.

"George Steinbrenner and Charles O. Finley are the best two owners in baseball," said Hunter in his thank-you speech. "I want to thank the Yankees for everything. I want to thank them for the money but in particular there are three people who I wish could be here today.

"They are Clyde Kluttz, the scout who signed me, my dad... and Thurman Munson. Those three guys got me where I am today."

Munson's instructors dispute accident report

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press

WICHITA, Kan. —The instructors who taught Thurman Munson to fly his Cessna Citation said Monday the New York Yankees' catcher was an excellent and conscientious pilot.

"We felt that he did a good job," said Robert Wayne, manager of the Wichita office of Flight Safety International. "In fact, he was a good pilot.

"And if Thurman Munson were still catching for the Yankees today, I'd be saying the same thing."

Wayne's remarks came in the wake of charges that Munson errors caused the accident that claimed his life Aug. 2.

Edward McAvoy, chief of the federal team investigating the jet crash, said his report would show that mistakes by Munson caused the accident.McAvoy also suggested that the FAA was a party to the accident throughlax licensing procedures, according to The New York Times.

The twin-engine Cessna Citation owned by Munson, crashed and burned short of the AkronCanton Airport in Ohio. Two others were injured in the crash.

"I was very surprised to hear of the crash," said Daniel Graham, the Flight Safety instructor who certified Munson to fly the Citation two weeks before the crash.

"He was very conscientious," Graham said. "I had no misgivings whatsoever about issuing that license." Graham spent five hours with Munson on July 17, administering an equipment exam and a flight check. Munson passed both on the first try, Graham said.

Carelessness "is the type of thing I look for," Graham said. He added he saw no hint of carelessness in Munson during the testing.

Phillip Bradley, Munson's primary instructor, agreed.

"Very definitely, (Munson) was not careless," Bradley said. But both Bradley and Graham declined to rate Munson's proficiency except to say he was "a good pilot."

Graham certifies an average of 10 jet pilots a month, exclusively on the Citation. The Wichita office of Flight Safety has trained more than 1,000 Citation pilots since the jets went on sale in 1977.

"He (Munson) was in control," Graham said. "There was no uneasiness about him, and that's one thing we look for."

Golfers take 3rd place in opening tournament

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Despite some inexperience, the UMass men's golf team finished third in a field of six behind first-place Rutgers and second-place West Virginia in the Eastern Athletic Association Tournament played Friday and Saturday on the Rutgers home course in New Brunswick, NJ.

Rutgers, who also won this same tournament last year, finished 18 shots ahead of runner-up West Virginia, and 30 shots ahead of UMass in the 36-hole, six-man team tourney. Rutgers held only a slim lead after Friday's rain-dampened round, ahead of then second-place UMass by just four strokes 391-395, West Virginia was just one stroke behind in third.

Tony Kelley and Bob Gladchuck lead the Minutemen on Friday, both scoring 78, while Freshman Steve Midttun shot a 79, and veterans Marty Hunt and Mark Duggan recorded 80. The sixth UMass golfer, Freshman Rich Murphy shot an 84. Despite the adverse weather conditions Friday, the UMass squad found themselves in perfect position after the first round. However it wasn't to be as the Rutgers linksters played near-perfect golf and picked up 26 shots on UMass Saturday, scoring a team total of 374 to win the tournament.

West Virginia also played a great second round shooting a total of 387, picking up 13 shots on the Minutemen who shot 400 and dropped into third place. The rest of the field finished as follows: Duquense (4th) - 399-400 (799), St. Bonaventure (5th) - 422-406 (828), and George Washington (6th) - 424-434 (858).

Marty Hunt and Tony Kelley lead the UMass team in Saturday's action, shooting a 74, and 77 respectively. But the rest of the team all shot over 80, Gladchuck 81, Duggan 83, Midttun 85, and Murphy 87.

Coach Ed Vlach referred to the tournament as a "massive foul-up," considering the organization of the officials of the tournament. "I was also extremely disappointed that we scored higher on Saturday when the conditions were perfect, than we did on Friday when it was raining and there was heavy winds."

The Minutemen play next in the Yankee Conference Championships at the Stowe Acres course in Stowe, Mass. Vlach said he expects the toughest competition from Connecticut and Rhode Island. He also added that three of the following golfers would be in the line-up for the Yan-Con Tourney, Rick Goldstein, Joe Tamsey, Bob Robichaud, and Steve Auerbach according to their practice round scores over the weekend.

City, diocese to foot bill for pope's visit

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Archdiocese ended debate over the costs of Pope John Paul II's visit to the city next month, announcing yesterday that it would assume construction costs of a $150,000 platform and altar to be used in an openair Mass.

"It would be a great pity if the public discussion of financial matters relating to the pope's visit were to distract us from this unique opportunity," said the Rev. William Helmick, the archdiocese's coordinator for the pope's Oct. 1 visit to Boston.

The announcement ended debate over the city's plans to help pay for construction of platforms for the altar and the 300-member choral group that will participate in the Mass.

City officials had originally estimated the cost of the papal visit, including police overtime, at $700,000.

The archdiocese said yesterday that it will also assume the cost of the sound and electrical systems as well as the cost of the choir platform.

At a city council meeting last week, a Protestant minister, the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and birth control and abortion advocate William Baird objected to the proposed use of public funds to help pay for the visit.

Similar objections have been raised in Philadelphia over plans to build a platform for a papal altar.

Baird went to U.S. District Court on yesterday before the announcement to seek an injunction against the use of public funds and the use of the Boston Common for the papal Mass.

Helmick said the pope's visit was meant to "bring us together, not drive us apart."

"The visit should not be an occasion of acrimony or contention among our citizens," he said.

Last weekend, church officials called for special church donations in honor of the pope's visit to Boston — his first stop on a six-city tour of the United States.

The archdiocese said no figures were available on the amount of the donations, but it said the collection was two to three times above normal

Campus textbook royalties still uncollected

By ELLEN TUCHMAN
Collegian Staff

A scholarship fund to be created with the royalties UMass professors receive on books they write and sell to University students has not yet been established by the administration.

An article in the faculty contract negotiated last fall entitled "Textbook Trust Fund" stipulates that all royalties derived from the sales of professors' books to their own students should go to an on-campus scholarship fund to be created by the administration.

Faculty Union President, Jules Chametzsky said both the faculty and administration agreed upon the provision, which was later approved by 91 percent of the faculty. However, many professors interviewed said they were unaware of the clause and are handling their royalties in different ways.

Professor Fergus M. Clydesdale, co-author of Food, Nutrition and You, said that although there is no set fund as yet, he would donate royalties from on-campus sales to a scholarship fund once it is established.

Clydesdale said he was aware of students' financial needs and initially wrote Food, Nutrition and You with Prof. Frederick J. Francis as a student service. A five year effort, the book is a compilation of 10 other sources and is no longer required reading for students.

The softcover edition has been in print for two years and sells for five dollars. Each author receives a royalty of 19 cents per text, or $190 a year for the 1,000 copies sold, Clydesdale said.

Clydesdale sold the rights to his book to Prentice Hall, a college textbook publishing company which he said printed the book for the lowest price, thus saving students' money.

However, professor Sheldon Goldman of the Political Science department said most authors have no say in determining the price of a book, and therefore do not influence their royalty fee.

Goldman said he was aware of the contract stipulation and although the provision has not been enforced, he has previously donated royalties from campus sales to the Alumni Scholarship Fund. This year he donated $15 to the Chancellor Bromery Scholarship Fund, $10 of which came from royalties.

"Professors should be sensitive to student's concerns," he said. "It's a good policy to avoid what might be seen as a conflict of interest...there should be no questions in the students' minds."

Although Goldman donates the royalties he earns, he said he empathizes with professor who has worked for years to produce his own text and therefore feels is entitled to his royalties.

Alice Rossi, editor of The Feminist Papers and a UMass sociology professor, said she believes escalating cost of books have no relationship to royalties. Never having heard of provision for the Textbook Trust Fund, Rossi said she feels most faculty members do not earn a significant amount of money from royalties.

Professor Oswald Tippo arranged not to collect royalties, from the lab manual he wrote for Botany 101. Tippo's widely used textbook, Humanistic Botany a 500-page volume, has been in print since January 1977. A text of this size costs $70,000 to publish, and Tippo said both he and co-author Professor William Stern have had to pay $5,000 each for secretarial work, xeroxing, plates, and copyrights.

"Humanistic Botany" has a list price of $13.95, the lowest price possible requested by Tippo. In addition, the University Bookstore sells it for $13.30.

Tippo said he heard of the article and feels it is a "loosely drawn provision, impossible to administer" because he cannot determine the number of his own students from those of other professors who utilize his text.

Most professors seem to agree that the major motivations for writing textbooks are professional and pedigogical; that is they wish to produce a work of professional quality that contains adequate teaching material. There is also a consensus that the amount of royalty money made is minimal, according to professors polled, and that the fund stipulations are being ignored.

Ousted Afghan president dies

NEW DELHI, India [AP] – Former Afghan President Nur Mohammed Taraki died yesterday from gunshot wounds received in a shootout at his official residence last Friday, Radio Pakistan said, quoting reports from Kabul. Prime Minister Hafizullah Amin took over the presidency from Taraki in a weekend coup.

The broadcast, monitored here by United News of India, said as many as 60 persons were fatally shot in the incident. The Revolutionary Council reportedly was meeting at the time in the residence – the former royal palace.

The radio report could not be confirmed immediately.

Afghanistan's new strongman, Amin, declared oppressors "who did not appreciate the toiling masses" were killed in the coup that made him president and he pledged good relations with all nations, "especially the Soviet Union."

The Kremlin, eager to protect the millions it has poured in to prop up the Marxist regime on Russia's southern border, sent him quick congratulations and made no mention of its past support for Taraki.

Hatfield school boss indicted

HATFIELD [AP] - Charges against Hatfield School superintendent John A. Skarzynski include larceny, embezzlement and assault, the Daily Hampshire Gazette of Northampton reported yesterday.

The newspaper had reported on Saturday that Skarzynski was named in 21 sealed indictments handed down by a Hampshire Superior Court grand jury.

At first it was thought the indictments stemmed solely from allegations made earlier this summer that Skarzynski had used students and school department employees to run errands and do chores for him.

But yesterday the newspaper quoted unidentifiable sources as saying an investigation by the office of District Attorney Thomas Simons and two weeks of testimony before the grand jury, gave rise to the additional criminal charges.

Skarzynski's lawyer, Samuel Marsella of Springfield, said his client would plead innocent to charges at his arraignment in Superior Court on Friday.

The town's school committee was expected to take up Skarzynski's case at a meeting last night.

Two seized in store holdup

SOMERVILLE [AP] - Two men were reported in stable condition yesterday after they allegedly held six persons hostage in a drugstore for three hours, gobbling down drugs and rat poison as they talked with police.

The siege Monday night ended when one of the alleged gunmen passed out and the other was disarmed as he groggily waved a shotgun at police. All six hostages escaped without injury, and no shots were fired.

Druggist Henry Marmer said the siege began when an armed man came to the back room of his drugstore, took narcotics and money and walked out. Police said the unidentified man was being sought.

Police identified the two as Jay Queeney, 30, of Boston and Mark Schultz, 30, of Sharon. Both were reported in stable condition in the intensive care unit at Somerville Hospital.

42 DC-9s inspected following emergency Logan landing

By KARL SWANSON
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Air Canada said yesterday that cracks in a pressure bulkhead apparently caused one of its DC-9 jets to lose part of its tail section during a flight from Boston to Nova Scotia.

The airline ordered 42 other DC-9s inspected and withdrew from service one plane that was found to have a similar flaw.

The Federal Aviation Administration said it was monitoring the Air Canada inspection and would order all DC-9s inspected if the cracks proved to be a widespread problem.

The DC-9 is manufactured by McDonnell Douglas, Inc. McDonnell Douglas also builds the wide-bodied DC-10, which was involved May 25 in the nation's worst air disaster.

McDonnell Douglas said the DC-9 has had an "excellent" safety record since the first was produced in December 1965. It said 340,000 passengers a day fly on DC-9s here and elsewhere in the world.

Despite the loss of pressure in Monday's near tragedy, the plane made it back and landed safely.

The rear pressure bulkhead that apparently cracked in the Air Canada planes is the final wall between the pressurized passenger cabin and a small, unpressurized area at the rear of the plane. Higher air pressure inside the airplane could eventually blow out the weakened section with explosive force.

A federally ordered inspection could, depending on its complexity, create problems for airlines relying on the DC-9. A visual check would not necessarily disrupt service, but orders to X-ray questionable parts of the plane could create scheduling problems for some airlines, officials said.

FAA spokesman Farrar said more than 300 DC-9s currently are operated by U.S. airlines, making the DC-9 one of the more popular commercial airliners. There are several variations of the DC-9. Air Canada said it believed any problem with the bulkhead would be confined to the Series 30 of the plane. Nearly 600 of that model are in operation around the world.

The 38 passengers on an Air Canada flight from Boston to Yarmouth and Halifax, Nova Scotia, were horrified when the rear 10 feet of the plane separated from the fuselage with a loud bang and roar of escaping air, leaving them staring at a gaping hole where the rest rooms once stood.

The plane limped 70 miles back to Boston and landed safely. One flight attendent was slightly injured and three passengers were treated at an airport aid station.

Whites ambush South Boston bus, three blacks hurt by hurled rocks

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON – White teenagers hurling rocks and large metal bolts ambushed three school buses yesterday near South Boston High School, injuring three black children, police said.

School officials blamed the outburst – the first major racial incident of the new school year – on tensions resulting from a cafeteria food fight and a scuffle the day before at an elementary school.

After a meeting with school administrators, police vowed to station patrolmen outside the school and to increase their escorts of buses through the white, working-class neighborhood.

"They will continue this as long as is necessary," said Fred Foye, a School Department spokesman.

Police said the whites set upon the buses as they drove through South Boston at 7:35 a.m. about two blocks from the school.

Two passengers were treated by a school nurse, and one girl was taken to Boston City Hospital for treatment of a minor injury, authorities said.

"The group of 15 or 20 who stoned the buses were all teenagers," said police Deputy Superintendent Francis J. Coleman. "It would seem that the incident was planned and not spontaneous."

After the incident, about 50 white students refused to enter the school, and they were dispersed by police. About an hour later, Foye said, about 50 or 60 white youths harrassed a black parent and vandalized cars outside the Gavin middle school, which also is in South Boston.

Later in the morning, a group of white youngsters congregated outside the high school, and one was arrested.

South Boston High was a frequent scene of racial violence during the first two years of busing. Since then, it has been relatively calm except for occasional outbursts.

Attendance at the school Tuesday was 782, compared with 902 on opening day.

Foye said yesterday's trouble "very definitely" was touched off by two earlier incidents in schools in the neighborhood.

On Friday, four white girls and two black girls flung food at each other in the high school cafeteria. And on Monday, a fourth grade white student at the Tynan elementary school in South Boston was stabbed in the eye with a pencil by a 10-year-old black boy.

NRC closes Tennessee plant

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The Nuclear Regulatory Commission ordered an immediate shutdown yesterday of an atomic fuel fabrication plant in Tennessee after the plant reported the apparent loss of weaponsgrade uranium.

The Nuclear Fuel Services, Inc., atomic fuel fabrication plant at Erwin, Tenn., was ordered closed after reporting the loss of at least 19.8 pounds of "high-enriched" uranium.

NRC spokesman Frank Ingram said the "high-enriched" uranium can be used to make atomic weapons.

He refused to say how much of the nuclear material is missing, saying the information is classified.

But under licensing arrangements, the company is required to report the loss of 9 kilograms or more of high-enriched uranium and shut down for inventory within 72 hours. Material is inventoried every two months. A kilogram is equal to 2.2 pounds.

In this case, the NRC did not allow the 72-hour deadline to run its course, but stepped in immediately to order a shutdown until the material can be found.

Ingram called the NRC move "a prudent action", and refused to say whether the unusual procedure was connected with the amount or type of missing material or the circumstances of its disappearance.

Ingram said the NRC has not determined whether the material is actually missing from the plant or has been lost somewhere within the processing system.

In general, only a few kilograms of high-enriched uranium is sufficient to make a nuclear weapon, but the actual amount necessary depends on the degree of enrichment.

Steven Sass, spokesman for Nuclear Fuel Services at the company's Rockville, Md., headquarters, said only that the firm is investigating the cause of the apparent uranium loss.

Street singer shares tunes

There was music on the sidewalk

By JOSEPH GANNON
Collegian Staff

Q. Who can draw a larger crowd to the front of the SUB than a "fight tuition hikes" rally?

A. Stephen Baird, 31, resident of Boston and street singer extraordinaire.

Baird said he travels extensively throughout the northeast and midwest bringing his street artistry to areas where it is unknown or rare.

"I began college in 1966 as a chemical engineering major at Northeastern university," Baird said, "but after five years all that math finally drove me to the streets."

While at Northeastern, Baird helped run a coffee house, where he was introduced to the music of street singers. It was also at Northeastern that he became involved with the anti-war movement, and in 1971 he left school and became a traveling street singer.

"When I first began street singing I was terrible," he confessed. "I was so bad that most clubs wouldn't hire me. It took me a while to learn how to become an entertainer."

How does Baird attract such large audiences?

"First I choose a location that is available to people passing by but not one that intrudes on sidewalk traffic," he said. "Then I'll start off with some loud songs and humor to attract people. Once I have an audience, I will switch over to children's songs and then gradually I will sing quieter songs to draw the audience in," he said.

Audience response is important to Baird because it is through the audience he makes his living, he conceded.

"Audiences are very good with street artists," he said. "They become very protective of me. There have been times when I have had to intervene with my audience to stop them from menancing drunks or cops who were trying to interupt the show."

But what of the life of the wandering minstrel, that freedom of which many of us dream?

"People do tend to over-romanticize the lives of street singers," Baird said. "I try to dispel some of the myths by answering questions and being very talkative with my audience, and involving them in my show."

If there is no great philisophical reward to being a street artist then why does Baird stay with it?

"Some artists are forced to the streets to keep from starving, and so that they can stay in their art without having to become dishwashers. I believe that the streetsare an important and powerful force," he said.

Baird said he also likes the personal responses he receives from people.

"Poems, sketches, flowers, invitations to dinner, a potato, and once a drunk who gave me his pants," said Baird, "are the real rewards of street singing."

Baird said he was leaving UMass Monday to tour a few colleges in Massachusetts and upstate New York. After a stopover in Boston, Baird said he will be off to Connecticut, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, New York, and then back to Massachusetts (possibly Amherst), returning by November 10.

During the winter Baird lives in Boston occasionally playing local clubs but mostly working on his book, which is partly a comprehensive history of street music and partly Baird's legal argument for the right and necessity of street artists to perform unregulated by local ordinances.

Treasurer, auditor reports received by grad senate

By LAURA SMITH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Graduate Student Senate reviewed its summer activities last night, but put off voting on any issues until a later session.

One of the reports reviewed was the treasurer's report, compiled by GSS Treasurer Tiziana Rota. The report focused on two major points: the newly-created guarantee fund and a financial audit of the GSS ordered by the UMass Board of Trustees.

According to a budget report, the GSS had a cash balance of $9,444.88 in fiscal 1979. This summer, the Executive Committee voted to set aside $2,000 for a general guarantee fund, with the remaining $7,444.88 to go to the senate's cash reserves.

These reserves can be used, for example, to meet funding promises that may otherwise be hurt by this year's graduate enrollment drop of 300. Because graduate programs depend largely on graduate student taxes, declined enrollment makes the reserve funds crucial.

The audit, required every five years by trustees, must be financed by the GSS at a cost of approximately $5,000-$6,000. According to Rota, the GSS was not prepared for such an expenditure.

"The only way to handle the situation," said GSS President Monte Pearson, "is to plead poverty."

He said the university would foot the bill, but would eventually revert payment responsibility back to the GSS. Another possibility, Pearson said, would be to construct some type of gradual payment plan.

In other business, Pearson referred to a letter from Chancellor Henry Koffler which stated that library progress is aimed primarily for the undergraduate students. However, it said, steps are also being taken to meet the research needs of graduate students and faculty. Any progress will rest on the outcome of engineering safety reports, the letter said.

Pearson also cited a memorandum from the Director of Libraries, Richard J. Talbot, to inform graduate students of revised library policy. Micro forms collections and the Government Documents collection wil be available, along with a carrels retrieval service for any materials remaining in students' carrels in the main library.

The GSS also announced three work-study jobs are available with the Senate, for a bookkeeper, preferrably with accounting experience; a typist-recorder; and a committee assistant.

For more information, contact the GSS, 919 Campus Center. Undergraduate applications are also being accepted.

The GSS will hold its next meeting Tuesday, September 25, at 7:15 in Campus Center 917.

Long lines outside the Campus Center Ticketron Outlet yesterday didn't bother these smiling Grateful Deadheads. Some devoted fans were in line at four a.m. to buy tickets for the upcoming Springfield concert.

'Deadheads' crave concert fix

By PAUL KRIER
Collegian Staff

"Deadheads" have crawled out again and made their passion visible.

By 4 a.m. yesterday anxious Grateful Dead fans had already formed a line outside the Campus Center Ticketron outlet, where tickets went on sale at 10.

"I can't remember the last time we had a line like this," said a Ticketron salesman.

But even the long line didn't discourage true Dead fans.

"It's worth it, without a doubt," said fan Pete Lurier after four hours in line.

"I'll wait as long as it takes to get tickets. There's nothing like a Grateful Dead concert – you can feel the vibes of the ectasy – packed people."

Self-proclaimed 'Deadhead' Rick Brenner, clad in blue jeans, a yellow Dead t-shirt and a red bandana, stood in line three hours.

"It'll be my 25th Dead concert, and if they put on a good show it's worth it," Brenner said.

A UMass music major who asked not to be identified said the Grateful Dead have a special appeal.

"Jerry Garcia reads my mind and sends it out there," he said. But even after 18 Dead concerts he insists, "I'm no Deadhead...Deadheads are people who follow them around; 300 miles is my limit."

John Dymon, who was buying tickets for himself and seven friends, spoke highly of Dead fans. "Dead people are in a class by themselves – anyone who can wait in line for three hours without getting hint out of shape is special" he said. The Dead fan is a mellow person, while in a Rolling Stones or Zeppelin line people go crazy. I've enjoyed this morning immensely."

Dymon's feelings regarding disco seemed typical of the majority of Dead fans.

"Disco's for plastic people," he said. "Rock people are more individual, less competitive."

Still another fan, Ken Skelly, sporting long curly hair, an earring in his left ear, a moustache and a beard, had no trouble justifying the wait.

"A Dead concert is a great place to trip and party – the people are unique in and of themselves. It's a different feeling than other rock bands – it's like a cult phenomenon," he said.

When asked his opinion of disco, Skelly's reaction was quite predictable.

"Disco sucks, he flatly stated. "It's just a repetition of bumps and grinds – no flow. I prefer music with a little more thought."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Afrikan-Amerikan Soc. holds first meeting

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

Third World senatorial elections, the state of the Afrikan-American Students Society and the Annual Homecoming were discussed at the Society's first meeting at the New Africa House last night. About 45 people attended the meeting as representatives from several Third World organizations on campus spoke about their groups.

Tony Johnson, a senator on the elections committee said that it is very important that all Third World students vote next Monday or Tuesday in order to fill the seats allotted to the Third World Caucus in the senate. Students who are going to vote in their area rather than the New Africa House, the polling place for Third World senators, should contact Johnson or someone on the elections committee to inform them of their intentions.

Johnson said that the election procedure is important because he fears that not following the proper procedures will get the election invalidated by the administration.

Tony Crayton, director of the Office of Third World Affairs said that it is critical that student input be at a maximum in order to secure those seats alloted. The Caucus needs to be at its fullest power, because of the difficulties facing the Senate this year.

Semaj Lycurgus, the acting president of the Society announced elections for officers that still needed to be filled. Several positions are vacant and nominations and elections have been set up the next two weeks.

During the meeting Lycurgus, who was the vice-president appointed Meldine Worrell as treasurer of the organization for the purpose of getting the budget moving and its dealing with RSO more concrete. Texter Dunwald was appointed as acting Sargent-at-Arms. All of the positions will be open and any student in the Third World community can run for offices. Worrell and Dunwald are freshpersons.

A tentative schedule of this years Homecoming events were presented. Lycurgus expressed the need for more ideas and more people to carry them out to insure the success of the events. The tentative plans are Wednesday the 31st of October there will be a movie "Black Orpheus" which takes place on a Carribean Island and is about a love affair between two young black people. Black Orpheus is a popular movie and has received very good reviews when it was previously shown on campus.

On Thursday the 1st of November there will be a student-faculty basketball game which will end by 10 o'clock a.m. and will be followed by a Rollerskating party in Chicopee. On Friday night there will be a Fashion show at the Hampden Center in Southwest.

On Saturday the football game UMass vs. the University of Maine Black bears will be played. Saturday night there will be a concert and hopefully Cameo and the Whispers will be performing. At this stage many of the events are tentative and need the serious participation of a great many Third World students.

Representatives from various organizations on campus gave brief talks about the things happening with the groups. Jose Bou, President of Ahora, pledged massive support from the Latin community on campus. The organization has arranged for the appearance of drummer Mongo Santamaria, on October 26th.

From the Asian American Students Association, Micheal Suziuki, a chairman, spoke of the already existing wide disassociation amongst different Third World communities on campus. He said that he has been in this community for a long time, and it is about time for things to change. Many of the groups programs are social in nature and they are planning a lecture series for this semester. They will sponsor a disco at Butterfield dorm this Saturday night beginning at 10:30.

Roberta Uno, the only Third World consultant who works in the Recognized Students Organization office stated that if any of the groups have programs they want to do, they should see her.

Uno also spoke about the new Third World Theater Series that has been set-up for this semester and is scheduled to begin this Friday. She spoke about the problems that Third World actors face in getting roles in this Valley. (See related story below.) Uno is also teaching a Third World Theater course on Monday and Wednesday from 4-6, there is still room available.

Tony Crayton spoke about the history of the organizations in general. He said that many of them came into existence because of the fights and protests by brothers and sisters in the Sixties. Crayton said it is important that students get involved with these organizations, not because they are about parties or socializing but because of the practical skills students can learn. Students interested in working for groups should contact him in the Office of Third World, 308 Student Union.

Miriam Carter, Production Staff member of the Third World Theater Series spoke to Black Affairs yesterday about the goals of the new series.

Members of the Third World community attended yesterday's meeting of the Afrikan-Amerikan Students Society. The society will be holding nominations for officers at next week's meeting, which will be at the New Africa House on Tuesday at 5 p.m. (Photo by Ed Cohen)

New Theatre Series;

By MARCIA HOSPEDALES
Black Affairs Staff

The Third World Theater Series was conceptualized this summer and has since been incorporated as a production of the Student Activities Office. The series sprung up from a definite need for cultural diversity in the area. According to producers of the series, non-white artists have in the past "repeatedly experienced the hopelessness of auditions which have only white parts, or roles which are servile or alienating." Additionally, Theater Arts Programs in the Valley have repeatedly failed to utilize the skills of talented Black, Hispanic and Asian artists. In fact, the programs have failed to fully realize their own potential as an instrument for increasing student awareness," said Miriam Carter, Publicity Staff person for the group.

The group has three main objectives—to act as a support group for young Third World artists in the area; to expose the university community to professional Third World artists and to try to reach a larger cross section of the community by offering plays at an affordable price. Four plays will be offered this semester at a seasonal ticket price of $5.00 per student and $8.00 for the general public. They are, 1) "Homeland"—a domestic comedy about South Africa, produced by Selaelo Maredi (a South African playwright) and Steve Friedman 2) "Prisms"—a spectrum of men's lives in prison, produced by Mascheri Chapple and Jerome Robinson of Northampton 3) "And the Soul Shall Dance"—a portrayal of Japanese immigrant life, produced by Wakako Yamuchi and 4) "Simpson Street"—a contemporary drama of Puerto Rican life in New York, produced by Edward Gallardo. Individual event tickets will be $2.00 per student for a play and $3.00 for the general public.

The series will be sparked off with a free film on the "History of the Black Theatre Movement" on Thursday September 20, 7:30 p.m. at Mahar Auditorium and Friday September 21, 7:30 p.m., CCA.

U.N. General Assembly elects first black in 10 years

UNITED NATIONS (AP)
The 34th session of the U.N. General Assembly elected its first black president in 10 years, Salim Ahmed Salim of Tanzania, and voted to admit its 152nd member, Saint Lucia, in its first meeting Tuesday.

A pending dispute over accreditations of the Cambodian delegation did not affect the session.

The assembly voted to admit Saint Lucia, a Caribbean island country with a population of 112,000 and an area of about 240 square miles, after it was opened by outgoing President Indalecio Lievano of Colombia.

Salim, who has been his country's U.N. ambassador for nine years, was the unopposed nominee of the African group. The job of president rotates among the regional groups represented in the United Nations.

In his opening address, Salim urged assembly members to overcome what he called a "crisis of confidence" in the world organization.

The decade now closing has been one of serious international economic negotiations, Salim said, but "the gap between rich and poor nations is widening and will continue to do so. But more importantly, living standards in developing countries, particularly among the poorest, are falling..."

Salim said the core of the Middle East problem "is the continued denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right to establish an independent state."

State of Race conf. to be held in west

The State of the Race Conference is one of the many programs sponsored by the Pan Afrikan Secretariat, with the aim of having Black people pool ideas collectively, put forth a unified analysis of the state of the race and then propose unified solutions.

The First Annual State of the Race Conference was held in 1977.

This year, the Third Annual State of the Race Conference will follow the tradition of being an inspirational, educational forum of Black thought and action, which involves Afrikan people from different parts of the world. Participants to date are John Hendrik Clarke, a noted historian and writer; Haki Madhubti (Don L. Lee), poet, political activist, founder of Third World Press and the Institute of Positive Education; Reverend Daughtry, Chairman of the Black United Front in Brooklyn; representatives from both the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) and S.W.A.P.O. (Southwest African People's Organization) of Namibia, which opposes the last racist strongholds in Afrika.

From Britain there will be a representative from the Pan Afrikan Congress Movement, to discuss the Pan Afrikan movement in Europe. From the West Indies, a representative from the recently formed revolutionary government of Grenada will discuss the Pan Afrikan movement in the West Indies and how the C.I.A. is trying to surpress the revolutionary movement. Le Grand Cleage, a noted historian, will discuss the use of ancient Afrikan History in the Black Movement today.

C.L.R. James has also been invited to speak on the task of the international Pan Afrikan movement. Finally, a representative from the Pan Afrikan Secretariat will discuss strategies for Black liberation.

There will be workshops on the role of the Black Church, elders, youths, and the Black Family. Political evaluations of the struggles in the 1970's will take place in order to make scientific projections into the 1980's.

The social, political and economic impact of the current recession that's rapidly bcoming a depression, on Black people, the Black Liberation Movement, and how we can fight and use it will also be discussed. Other topics are the land base question, and the question of waging struggle for the liberation and possession of Afrika, a state in America, or both. Most importantly and throughout the conference, there will be workshops on Organizing Our Communities. Methods of Theory and Practice.

It is only through organization and education that we can strategically, carefully and scientically plan our path to freedom. With this understanding we are calling for the necessary mass motion based not on what we want, but upon what our people want—One People, with One Aim and One Destiny.

The State of the Race Conference takes place on October 12, 13 and 14 at the Castlemont High School, 8601 Mac Arthur Boulevard, Oakland, California.

Take your pick: Talk or be nuked

While the U.S. House votes against reviving Selective Service registration, reportedly in order to study its specifics, a sleeping bear and a bearded dictator lie 90 miles off the Florida coast.

Jack Gallagher

And meantime, to complicate matters further, Carter is urging the Senate to ratify SALT II.

However, though a reinstitution of the draft and the apparent Soviet buildup of troops — if not nuclear weapons — are interrelated, the two issues are not interdependent.

For instance, if the Soviets are stockpiling nuclear weapons on Cuba — opinions to this are mixed — a draft of 18-year-olds would do little to avoid annihilation.

A high school graduate from Dubuque, Iowa, toting an M-16 rifle, would do little to thwart a Soviet ICBM.

But SALT ratification is contingent on the Cuban issue, nonetheless: If the Senate does not trust the Soviets now, at a supposed cross-road to world-wide peace, then a cold war — if not another missile crisis — will be among us.

Carter recently told a group of religious leaders that rejection of SALT could eliminate "efforts to find a way to eliminate nuclear weapons from the face of the earth."

However, because nuclear weapons are a fact of the modern world, eliminating the multitudinous warheads from underground silos around the globe is naive jibberish.

Therefore, the only way to avoid nuclear proliferation is through communication: Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin have been meeting this week ot discuss the current Cuban situation.

That no one wants to be enlisted through a reinstitution of the draft is a given.

But no one wants to be blown from the face of earth, either.

Diplomatic talks an absolute necessity

There is a time for emotion and there is a time for clarity. Sadly, this second quality has been found lacking in many strife-torn areas of the world today. Misunderstandings, misconceptions, and misguided government policies continue to exacerbate problems far out of proportion.

Bob Caroll

Consider, for instance, the middle east. Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan was roundly criticized by his colleagues for daring to talk to West Bank and Gaza strip Palestinians about their future. I am sick of hearing the word "intransigence" because it cannot begin to describe the utter stupidity of any policy that precludes direct negotiation. Even at the height of the Vietnam War the Paris Peace Talks continued!

Of course there are reasons for the stubborness shown by Begin's Likud Party government. The greatest reason is historical. It is an unchallenged fact that Jews have been one of the most persecuted races ever to walk the face of the earth. Even today, in places such as the Soviet Union and Syria, there are special restrictions placed on the activities of Jews. And this is terrible. However, it is no less terrible when the victims are Palestinians. An Arab living in occupied terrority on the West Bank could lose his land any time Israel decides to build a new settlement.

Will an eloquent discussion of history save an old farmer his land?

There are certainly other reasons for the current stalemate, not the least of which is the Palestinian Liberation Organization, led by Yasser Arafat, one of the world's most celebrated windbags. This pompous fool claims to be the leader his people need for their Palestinian homeland. But are the Palestinians the ones who are supporting him? No Foreign countries, such as Saudi Arabia and Iraq, control the strings of this puppet. As long as these countries continue to bankroll Arafat, the true voice of the Palestinian people will be suppressed.

One area of this discussion which has been largely ignored is American involvement. Surely, there must be more our government can do to bring about peaceful resolutions to these problems.We were afraid to tell the Shah what to do as Iran was crumbling. We didn't know what to tell Somoza to do, or we didn't care enough to pressure him to change. In Israel confusion and misunderstandings exist. We cannot allow history to repeat itself.

"And so we beat on, boats against the current, borne back ceaselessly into the past."

But we've got other good things to offer you, too. College courses which challenge you both mentally and physically. Management training and experience you'll find valuable in civilian as well as in military jobs. And instant leadership responsibility in your first job after college.

If any of this interests you, check out Army ROTC. And even if you enroll for the money, you'll graduate with something worth a lot more . . . gold bars of an Army officer.

Editorial/Opinion

Woman issue often unnoticed

Recent Collegian stories regarding the failure of the University to correct campus safety problems probably concerned many dedicated to ending violence against women. There is another important problem at UMass and elsewhere, however, that often goes unnoticed because it is not easily researched or supported by reports and studies.

Lisa Capone

The problem I speak of involves the attitudes of both sexes toward the competencies and attributes of women. Sterotypic attitudes toward women run rampant on our campus. From passing comments to intellectual discussions, the same themes prevail--men are agressive, business-oriented, and straight forward; women are submissive, emotional, and sneaky.

This problem, in its own way, is equally as disturbing as that of violence against women.

One may ask, how long have these ideas about men and women existed? Throughout history, literature is full of achieving, competent men, and passive, incompetent women.

What's alarming is not so much that women have been stereotyped this way in the past, but that the sterotypes still persist in today's world of growing social awareness.

It seems that for every woman who demands respect from men, there is at least one whose brains virtually fly out the window in the presence of males. These latter women have found it easier to get through life by "playing dumb." Psychological studies have found that when males and females are put in competitive situations, women are unlikely to perform to their full potential especially when competing against physically attractive men.

This behavior may be an easy escape route for women to take, but it does nothing for their self-esteem. Continued subservient behavior will consistently block the efforts of feminists to win respect for women.

In a recent radio interview, Nancy Friday, author of "My Mother, Myself", used this situation to illustrate a point:

A businessman says to a fellow worker, Harry, "Boy, you're a competitive man."
"Damn right," says Harry.
The man makes a similar comment to Elizabeth--"Boy, you're a competitive woman."
"I am not!" says Elizabeth defensively.

Until women learn to respect themselves they can never expect to receive the respect of men. No progress can be made until Elizabeth - and her sisters - are willing to stand up and say, "Yes, I am a competitive and competent person. Do not judge me as a member of a stereotypic group. For, yes, I am a woman, but above all I am myself, a unique individual."

'Rape is a violent crime, sex is the weapon'

To the Editor:

In response to comments found in the article Students Agree: Campus too dark, (Collegian 9/14/79), we feel a need to offer our viewpoint to Eric Ahola and Sarir Khamsi's statements that women who dress and walk a certain way are "asking for it."

Asking for what, Mr. Ahola?

Asking to be raped and sexually abused? Mr. Ahola, do you consider yourself to be one of those "people who can't restrain themselves" from physically attacking and violently degrading a woman?

Rape is a violent crime and sex is the weapon used. The issue here is not women's personal dress styles but the growing fear and increased awareness of sexual abuse of women on this campus.

Violence against women is only perpetrated by attitudes such as the ones you stated, serve to clarify the need for a more broad based educational effort concerning the problem of violence against women on this campus.

Crayton letter 'irresponsible'

To the Editor:

It is a shame to see so irresponsible a person as Tony Crayton chosen for such a responsible article. His inflammatory use of the stereotype "wile merchants", concerning Jews, in the 12/6/78 issue of the Collegian, his disgust at "Zionist bellyaching" concerning the slaughter of 6,000,000 Jews and many others betray a vicious anti-semitism that responsible persons should recognize and loathe.

Lewys spelled with 'Y', not 'I'

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to an advertisement we the LEWYS corporation, placed in the Lost Column of the Classified Section. It ran on September 13 and 14 and was intended for a lost board member of the LEWYS corporation.

Upon reading Collegian on said dates, we were pleased to see that the ad appeared. However, we were very displeased that the ad contained a typographical error. LEWYS is spelled with a "Y" and not an "I."

We, of the LEWYS corporation understand how difficult it is to run a large organization such as the Collegian.

Luckily the mistake was inconsequential and ad produced the desired result. We just want to point out the LEWYS is spelled with a "Y."

LEWYS is young but one of the fastest growing corporations in America. Remember LEWYS THINKS BIG.

Dismal cloud of smoke

To the Editor:

The problems you have before you at UMass/Amherst are gigantic--perhaps insoluble...

But there is one dismal cloud you can remove from the atmosphere here and that is the cloud of smoke produced by smokers which is suffocating us--and worse, KILLING US.

I recognize the right of a smoker to kill himself with nicotine but I do not want to be subjected to his vice. If someone backed up a motor vehicle to a window and started pumping CO into a room, someone just might get upset.

The exhaust from the mouths of smokers is just as deadly.

Moralist and legalist aborts the real issue

Abortion is, I suspect, one of those issues which is simultaneously important and boring. The shrill dogmatism of both sides does nothing to diminish the intellect's growing willingness to abandon the struggle with an unresolvable moral dilemma.

Elfred Owens

Indeed it is an issue which is only completely resolvable for those who are willing to take up absolute positions, and very few will not compromise this absolutism when differing circumstances involve the same principles.

Detecting this fact the anti-abortionists have cunningly clothed some of their arguments in the fashionable garb of 'human rights'; rights which the pro-abortionists extol in the case of the woman and ignore in the case of the foetus.

The upshot of this, of course, is that interminable arguments ensue concerning the beginnings of a 'person': Is a 'person' a biological fact from conception or is a 'person' socially defined and legitimized outside the womb, and does this necessitate the elaboration of an unsavoury category of 'unperson'?

As far as my own opinion is concerned, the moralist and the legalist in me engage in what many would regard as an unholy alliance, and I place abortion in the category of justifiable homicide (although of course I'm not suggesting that anybody should be charged with this; it just seems a useful category); occasions do call for a necessary tragedy. This view appals both pro and anti-abortionists; a fact strongly in its favour.

Thus, it was as a pragmatist that I viewed Sixty Minutes Sunday (Sept. 16) covering a case in which a doctor had been indicted for murder because he had done nothing to save a foetus which he had attempted to abort legally, but which had emerged alive.

The case was complicated by a prosecution witness who said that, contrary to the defendant's testimony, he (the defendant) had not been feeling the foetus's pulse but had been strangling the foetus.

The prosecutor was clear about where he stood: When the foetus is in the womb, and is aborted by a qualified physician (and all other technical qualifications, length of pregnancy etc. are in order) the abortion is legal, but should a freak case occus — an uncommonly strong foetus or a faulty abortion injection — and the foetus emerges alive, the doctor's responsibility is to save the foetus.

In other words he is liable, even in the peculiar circumstances of an abortion, for sins of omission.

Elfred Owens is a graduate exchange student from England.

Women's history recorded at Smith

By DEBBIE COHEN and SHERI SIMONTON
Collegian Staff

The Sophia Smith women's archives collection, housed at Smith College in Northampton, offers a unique resource to anyone interested in the social and intellectual history of women.

The collection, named in honor of the Smith College founder, includes diaries, letters, journals, photographs, documents, paintings, and artifacts depicting the lives and issues of women, past and present.

The scope of the collection is international, though its principal holdings reflect United States history, and date back to approximately 1790, according to Mary Elizabeth Murdock, directoy of the Collection since 1970. The periodical collection includes many diverse magazines ranging from "La Mujer" of Mexico to "Nok Lapja" of Hungary.

Among the issues represented in the collection are: education, employment, birth control, industry, peace, professions, suffrage, social reform, women's liberation, and women's rights.

One of the most notable collections, according to Murdock, contains the manuscripts of Margaret Sanger, founder of the birth control movement, who will be commemorated at a conference at Smith in November.

"It is fair to say that the collection contains everything that has any bearing on women's issues," Murdock said.

Although no material may be taken out, limited photocopy service is available, and prints of photographs may be purchased. Reference service on a limited basis is also available.

During the school year, the Sophia Smith Collection may be viewed in the basement mezzanine, Hills wing of the Neilson Library, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

CBS: Don't touch that knob

Editor's note: this is the last of a three-part series on the new fall television season.

By ROD CARVETH
Collegian Staff

This fall, CBS will be employing a programming strategy of "strength and stability" by having the fewest number of schedule changes of the three networks.

Of 16 returning shows, 15 remain in their original time slots. The strategy will be a welcome relief to the beleaguered audiences of the 1978-79 television season who were never sure when their favorite show would be on due to the vast amount of program shuffling.

Several returning shows will be different than they were last season, most notably, All in the Family. Now entitled Archie Bunker's Place, the show will center around Archie's tavern, where he'll bump heads with his new, politically liberal partner, played by Martin Balsam. Edith (Jean Stapleton) will only appear a few times during the course of the season.

Julie (MacKenzie Phillips) will get married on One Day at a Time. Olivia (Michael Learned) will return to Walton's Mountain this season but James MacArthur has left Hawaii Five-o. Also leaving is M-A-S-H co-star Radar (Gary Burghoff), whose role will be filled by Klinger (Jamie Farr).

CBS will introduce two new series that should prove successful. Trapper John, M.D., stars Pernell Roberts as the character from M-A-S-H who plays the surgeon at a San Francisco hospital 28 years after the Korean War. Trapper John, M.D. will air Sunday nights at 10 p.m.

Paris features James Earl Jones from Roots: The Next Generations as a tenacious, but principled police captain/criminology professor working for the Los Angeles Police Department. Paris will hold down the 10-11 p.m. Saturday night slot.

The Last Resort, a comedy about four college students who work as waiters at a popular resort hotel in the mountains, will probably be a ratings sleeper. Unfortunately, the show is followed at 8:30 p.m. on Wednesday by Struck by Lightening, an unpromising sitcom with Jack Elam as a latter-day Frankenstein. Also holding little promise is Working Stiffs (Saturdays at 8 p.m.), starring John Belushi's younger brother Jim in a comedy about two brothers who work as janitors in their uncle's Chicago office building.

The Bad News Bears, which was a surprise success this spring, will not only be hindered by having Working Stiffs as a lead-in, but also by having Big Shamus, Little Shamus following it at 9 p.m. on Saturdays. Big Shamus, Little Shamus is a comedy-drama about a close relationship between a veteran Atlantic City hotel detective and his teenage son, a detective fiction fan. At least the locale—Atlantic City, with its brand new casinos—is new.

California Fever, billed as exploring "the lifestyle of Southern California," and featuring a group of adolescents headed by Kristy McNichol's brother Jimmy, fills the 8-9 p.m. slot on Tuesdays. But it probably won't last too long.

Considering the various network offering and the fact that ABC has gotten the jump by already solidifying its schedule, it appears that this season will see a widened gap between ABC and its two rivals. CBS should hold its own, while NBC will probably slide even further. One thing is certain: despite protests from TV's creative talents, the ratings' point is king, and those shows that don't catch on quick are certain to get the axe.

HEW awards grants to end sex biases, discrimination

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's Office of Education announced Monday the award of 70 grants, totaling approximately $5.3 million, under the Women's Educational Equity Act Program. UMass will not receive one of the grants, however.

The grants will support model programs across the nation to eliminate sex discrimination, bias, and stereotyping in education, and are expected to benefit a wide cross-section of women and girls from various ethnic, geographic, and income groups.

Massachusetts institutions receiving WEEAP grants are the Nantucket Public School Committee and Radcliffe College's Holyoke Center.

Security tightens for pope

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston officials, now estimating that over 1 million people will jam the city to see Pope John Paul II, said yesterday they are planning the tightest security net in the city's history for the Oct. 1 papal visit.

"We want to reassure the people of Boston that security will be the most visible in the city's history," said Boston Police Commissioner Joseph Jordan. "But we want to remind all the people that the spirit of cooperation is needed for this historic visit."

Jordan and other city officials detailed plans yesterday for crowd control along a 20-mile motorcade route and at the Boston Common, where the pope will lead a Mass for an estimated 170,000 people.

Meanwhile, abortion advocate Bill Baird went to U.S. District Court, seeking an injunction to prevent public money from being spent on the Mass, or the use of Boston Common. No court date was set.

Jordan said a 7,000-member force, including 5,000 Massachusetts National Guardsmen and 500 state police troopers, would close off sections of the city to traffic as early as the weekend before the pope comes to the city.

Units of the state Registry of Motor Vehicles and the Metropolitan District Commission police will also take part in security, Jordan said.

Under plans revealed yesterday, National Guard units would begin to move into the city on Saturday — two days before the pope arrives — to help enforce a parking ban along the parade route and in the area of the Common.

At midnight Sunday, traffic will be banned within an area bounded by Massachusetts Avenue, Storrow Drive and the Southeast Expressway. The Common will also be closed to the public at that time until sunrise Oct. 1.

David Mugar, who is coordinating the visit for the city, said special arrangements were being made for Jewish worshippers who may have to get in and out of the area to attended services for the Yom Kippur holiday.

Mugar said special "code numbers" will be announced at synagogues around the city and those seeking special travel exemptions can call a city hotline at 725-4162.

Traffic and Parking Commissioner Emily Lloyd said a special area near the Common would be reserved for charter bus service from outlying communities.

Plans are also in the works for shuttle buses to run to the Common area from adjacent transit stops, she said.

Jordan noted that he expects from one to two million people in the city for the visit, much higher than the original estimate of 500,000.

"I would rather be overcommitted than undercommitted for something like this," he said.

DVP speakers offer learning alternatives

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Staff

Don't be duped into believing the only way to learn anything is through classes and books. The Distinguished Visitors Program lectures offer an alternative to studying that can be informative and entertaining, according to Chariman Joel Weissman.

The DVP brings interesting and often controversial speakers to the University, including the Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden appearance scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 30. A student-run organization with an annual budget of $26,000, the program is financed by a $1.50 fee paid each semester by students, Weissman said.

Weissman characterized the program agenda as an attempt to get "an even program balance from the women's community and the third-world community". In this respect, the program has been successful in attracting such previous guest speakers as feminist author Kate Millet; black activist Eldridge Cleaver; consumer advocate Ralph Nader; and journalist Jack Anderson.

Others include Mel Blank, voice of cartoon characters Bugs Bunny, Porky Pig, and Donald Duck; and Red Sox first baseman Carl Yastrzemski.

Weissman said potential future speakers include Wilson Brian Key, author of Subliminal Seduction and Media Sexploitation; athletes Bill Lee and Bill Rodgers; and Betty Shabatt, widow of Malcolm X.

Women linksters set for Holyoke match

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

Fall season begins for the women's golf team as they tee off in the EAIAW regionals at Mount Holyoke. Coach Jane McGahan is optimistic about her team's chances going into the tournament, despite the fact that the women haven't played any competitive rounds this fall.

"Our match last Friday with Mount Holyoke was cancelled without warning," explained Coach McGahan. "Their coach didn't call so we drove out there in the rain and found no one around to meet us." Although McGahan was upset by the lack of notice, she said a match with Mount Holyoke would probably be rescheduled for later in the fall.

McGahan will take five women to the EAIAW this weekend, including last years top player and four new team members. Junior Jane McCarthy was the number one player on last spring's New England championship team. She will be joined at Mount Holyoke by junior transfer Barbara Spilewski, freshman Laurie Gibbons, Amherst native Sally Rowan and senior Julie Simonds. The best four of five scores will count at the EAIAW.

According to McGahan, the top team in the east is Penn State. "They won't compete in the EAIAW but their size and the fact that they give scholarships puts them above us." The team to watch in the EAIAW could be Amherst College, which attracted top prep swingers Monika Romano and Susan Santucci. "They will definately be tough in the spring," said McGahan. Mount Holyoke and Rutgers will also field competitive teams in the EAIAW.

In her fourth year as UMass coach, McGahan has seen women's golf grow from days when the school couldn't field a full team into an interested core of ten or twelve girls. "It's great not having to scrounge around to get enough girls to play," she said. McGahan readily conceded that "education comes first for the girls. We do the best we can considering the girls have to work in the summer and can't work on improving their game. You lose you touch quite easily in golf."

After the short fall season, women's golf will hibernate until spring. McGahan, currently assistant pro at Hickory Ridge Country Club, will probably move to Florida to work on a course there. "Look for us in the spring, we'll be tough," she warned.

Women runners with depth

by JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A combination of depth, young talent and experience will be the key to success for Women's Cross-Country this fall.

"We are much stronger in depth this year than last year," Coach Ken O'Brien said. O'Brien, the Men's Cross-Country Coach, is assisting new coach Peter Pfitzinger for the first few weeks of the season.

"Our top eight or nine runners are very close in talent," Pfitzinger said. Barb Callanan, 'Dill' Wilson and Monica Scott will be running as seniors this year. The remaining top runners are juniors or sophomores.

Co-captains for the team are senior Monica Scott and junior Linda Welzel.

It would be difficult to say anyone was the number one runner on the team. The ranking should change with each meet," O'Brien said.

The Minutewomen's toughest meets should be against Harvard on September 25, and against the University of Vermont later in the season. The team will run an invitational meet this Saturday held by the University of Connecticut.

A place called
Alpha
and what you can do there

JEFF FORMAN - Instructor

Scientists have recognized that there's a special functioning level of the brain where the mind operates in an extremely high, intuitive, creative, and expanded capacity.

They've called this level Alpha.

The goal of Alpha Awareness is to help you learn to consciously function in Alpha at will, wherever and whenever you decide.

So you can expand your talents, improve your skills, develop your psychic abilities, effect positive changes in your personality, and correct disturbing bad habits.

In short, to allow you to function as a superior human being.

We help you to learn basic techniques you can use to make virtually any life situation easier to deal with. From handling your son's poor homework to handling your boss' impossible deadlines to handling your nose's allergic reaction to cat hair.

We help you to learn to apply these techniques to insomnia, smoking, headaches, poor memory and overweight.

With these techniques you can learn to rule your body by controlling your mind. They are a means to becoming healthier. And more vital. And happier.

A course called Alpha Awareness
and how it works

The course itself takes four evenings and one weekend to complete. Most people take them back to back. But you can do it separately according to your own time slots. And once you've graduated you can sit in on future sessions as often as you like, free.

If you're interested but not convinced or want to know more, we run seminars in this area for free where you can find out just what goes on here in more detail.

And you're invited to get real tough with us with your questions. The atmosphere is friendly and we can take it.

Dress is informal and loose all the time. You wear whatever makes you feel comfortable and relaxed.

Are you ready for a place called Alpha?

See you there.

Golfers place 3rd

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Despite the excellent golfing conditions and perfect weather, every player on the UMass men's golf team shot over 80, causing the team to finish third behind Connecticut and Vermont in the Yankee Conference Championships Monday, at the Stowe Acres golf course in Stowe, Mass.

Conencticut won the tournament with a team total of 491, just four strokes better than Vermont (495), and ten strokes better than the Minutemen (501). The rest of the field finished as follows: Rhode Island (503), New Hampshire (510), and Maine (523).

Gerry Scott lead the Huskies with a five-over-par 77 but lost medalist honors to New Hampshire's Tom Glas who fired a four-over 76. Mark Duggan and Eric Goldstein lead the UMass golfers, both shooting 81. Marty Hunt, Tony Kelley, and Bob Gladchuck all shot 84 with many "errant shots" according to UMass coach Ed Vlach. Rounding out the Minutemen squad were Bob Robichaud with an 87, and Joe Tamsey with a fat 91.

Vlach, speaking of the tournament said: "I was surprised at the high scores, but there were only five scores under 80." He accounted for the high scores by saying that "the tee and pin positions were very difficult."

After this week's practice rounds at Hickory Ridge Country Club Vlach will decide on the five golfers he will take to the New England Championships on Sunday. This tournament will be played Monday and Tuesday on the Taconic C.C. and Waubeeka Springs C.C. courses-which are both on the Williams College campus. There will be 18-25 teams competing in the tourney.

McEvilly set to lead Minuteman gridders

By PAT LESLIE
Collegian Staff

Winning the national championship in football is quarterback Mike McEvilly's goal for the season. This is Mcevilly's eighth and final year of play.

McEvilly came to UMass with a George H. Barber Scholarship to play football. Mike was recruited from Clinton High School in Clinton, Mass. and has been playing quarterback for eight years, four years in Clinton, and four years at UMass. "Being quarterback is great because of the leadership and responsibility that comes with it," said McEvilly. While being in charge of the football game he feels somewhat responsible for the winnings and losings of the team. "Being the quarterback can be a lot of pressure, but it is worth it," commented McEvilly.

On the first day of school he had heard of the football tryouts, so the next day he went to them and made the team. He started playing as a linebacker and a center and then changed over to quarterback four weeks later.

The five-foot eleven inch McEvilly is a left-handed quarterback that has a few problems with seeing over some of the defensive players, Trying to cope with his height disadvantage, he looks between players instead of over them.

"Playing football took up quite a bit of my time but every minute was worth it, because football adds to going to school," stated McEvilly. "Practicing, studying and living near each other keeps us together August through December as a team, working somewhat like a family," McEvilly added.

Mike commented that the football coaches here at UMass really know what they are doing. He said that they are really excellent coaches because they personally work with you and that they try to get all they can out of you. Since being the quarterback, the coaches tell him that if he gets a chance to run with the ball that he could. Last year, McEvilly made two touchdowns.

The only injuries McEvilly has had while playing football is a neck injury and sprained ligaments in his knee. Along with his injuries came the worst football game he could ever remember playing.

During his senior year in high school, they were playing in the Super Bowl with ten thousand people watching. He threw an interception which the other team ran back five yards for a touchdown. The second mistake he made was on an option play. Mike pitched the ball out and a member of the other team caught the ball and ran eighty-five yards for another touchdown. Somewhere towards the end of the game, a football player player picked McEvilly up, threw him on his head and knocked him out cold for three minutes. His team lost the game, 21-14.

Football isn't the only sport thet McEvilly likes to play. Baseball, along with football are his two favorite sports, even though he likes playing hockey and basketball at times. He started playing baseball when he was four years old. He played with his father and his uncle, who was in a farmer's baseball league. Neither one of McEvilly's parents forced him into playing sports and they are behind him one hundred percent whether winning or losing.

Mike is majoring in English because he thought while he was here at UMass he would go into something he really enjoyed.

Mike also enjoys being at UMass because it gives him a chance to do so many things he likes doing, for example he is able to play both football and baseball here. He also said that he can get a good education up here and it gives him a chance to meet people.

Senior quarterback Mike McEvilly, shown in action during the 1978 season, will be leading the Minutemen in the home opener against Maine this Saturday. Mike was 14 for 22 last Saturday against Villanova. (Staff photo by Amira Rahman)

No ice time for Gordie

HARTFORD (AP) - "Minor dizzy spells" are keeping Gordie Howe from lacing up the skates for his 32nd season as a professional hockey player.

Dr. Vincent Turco, physician for the Hartford Whalers, said he wouldn't allow Howe to begin practicing with the team until the results of further tests are in.

"It is not a life-endangering situation," Turco said Tuesday. "He has slight dizzy sensations when he turns." The 51-year-old hockey star began having the problem late last season, but did not tell team officials. He has undergone several tests since that time.

Turco saod the final X-rays and blood tests should be ready within a few days.

Howe said he is worried about the dizzy spells. After he watched the opening of the Whalers' training camp in the Hartford suburb of Bolton, he said, "If the doctors say I shouldn't play, I guess I can't."

Aside from the dizziness, Dr. Turco said Howe was in "excellent condition. It is an unusual phenomenon to find a man of his age in such fine condition."

Booters open season at Bridgeport tonight

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Starting the 1979 season with what coach Russ Kidd termed his "most experienced" group of players, the UMass men's soccer team travels to the University of Bridgeport tonight for a 7:30 contest.

The Minutemen, after losing four games in a row late last season, barely missed an NCAA tournament bid yet went on to become the ECAC division I Northeast Regional Champions with a record of 12-5.

Despite losing the three top scorers from 1978, UMass seems to have a revitalized offensive attack; scoring 13 times in preseason contests.

While final lineups are not definite, senior Wayne Moran and Ludlow, Mass. native Antonio M. Dias will start at two forward positions. Another probable starter at forward is sophmore and former high school All-American Doug White. The Needham native, the team's fastest man, scored the winning goal against Boston University in the double-overtime title game last year.

Tri-captains Mark Vasilotti, Mark Vassington with junior Scott Cooper will handle midfield, called "my best in four years" by Kidd. Vassington and former UMass player (now pro) Tasso Koutsoukos last year tied a UMass record for assists with seven. Vassington is also the top returning scorer, netting four from his halfback position in 1978.

The Minutemen will again feature a belligerent defense led by senior tri-captain Mike St. Martin. Joining St. Martin will be Hadley native and senior Greg Omasta. Starting in goal, despite being sick much of preseason will be junior Mark Marilla. Marilla proved himself as a stingy netminder in 1978 allowing 15 goals in 15 games with five shutouts. Marilla's 112 saves as a sophomore last year ranked him second for UMass all-time saves in a season.

If Bridgeport (1-2) has any advantage, it is that they have played three games already this season. After losing to top ranked UConn 7-0, Bridgeport topped Bates 2-0 and in their most recent game lost to Hartwick 4-2. Coach Fran Bacon was very optimistic about this season and in particular about recruits Justin Antoine and Franklin Williams from the West Indies. Bridgeport's top scorer from last year's 9-7-3 campaign is back as well. Egien Scotlend netted seven goals and added one assist.

Bridgeport's biggest problem in 1978 was their offense, scoring only 31 goals in 19 contests. UMass was somewhat more productive, netting 39 goals in 17 games including the ECAC tournament.

With the possibility of the University being expelled from the ECAC, the soccer team will have to look for an NCAA berth again this season in the hope of post-season play. The Minutemen have always shown they can play well against the top New England teams and this year should be no exception. In two sixty minute games against Brown in pre-season this year, UMass played up to the caliber of the number two ranked team in New England, winning an afternoon contest 4-1 before losing a game that night 3-0.

Fonda charged as subversive

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

UMass veterans yesterday charged the Sept. 30 appearance of Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden would violate a state law prohibiting "known subversives" from voicing political views in a public place.

Members of the Veteran's Service Organization also announced plans to obtain a restraining order in Greenfield Superior Court.

"We think that (the appearance) is wrong and that we should stand up for what we believe in, and that's what we're doing," organization President Joseph Collins yesterday said.

Collins said a lawyer, hired by the veteran's organization, will present their case before the court sometime this week. Collins refused to name the attorney representing the campus organization.

In a news release issued yesterday, the Veterans organization said the scheduled appearance is a "direct insult to the patriotism, bravery and courage" of every veteran, but "especially those Vets who gave their lives and were wounded and maimed in support of the long standing ideals and beliefs of this nation."

The event, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program, has met considerable opposition from campus veteran's since its announcement last week.

"As far as we're concerned," Program Chairman Joel Weissman last night said, "this is a problem between Fonda and Hayden, and the veterans on campus."

He said the issue is one of free speech.

"On what basis are they trying to deny her the right to speak," he asked.

Program Vice-chairman Howard Goldman said, "We understand what they are saying, but cannot condone their action. Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden have as much a right to freedom of speech as the veterans have to voice their opposition to them."

Fonda and Hayden's UMass appearance is one scheduled in their nationwide "barnstorming" tour to run from Sept. 23 to Oct. 25. Weissman said the couple are scheduled to speak only on issues such as alternative energy and the upcoming 1980 elections, "they're not here to talk about Viet Nam."

The campus appearance was last night granted a license by the Amherst Board of Selectmen, in its weekly meeting. Selectmen grant licenses to permit admission charges, which are legally prohibited under the state's blue laws.

Collins said of the proposed prohibiting order, "I believe the Town will feel the same way as the Veteran's Service Organization. We have to pursue it as far as we can...I am very confident a Superior Court Justice will interpret the law in my favor."

Acting Director of the Student Affairs Office O.C. Bobby Daniels last night said he was unaware of any legal actions taken by the veterans organization.

"This isn't the first controversial speaker that people don't agree with, and it won't be the last," said Weissman of Fonda.

"I feel bad the veterans are venting their anger on the people who fought their presence in Viet Nam, rather than on those who sent them there to die," he said.

Collins said, "I am not venting any anger at those who sent me—the U.S. Why? They make it possible for me to obtain an education."

The objection said veteran's organization member and Viet Nam Veteran Paul Withers is the proposed use of UMass money and building. "The objection is paying the girl money to come and talk," he said.

"If we have not succeeded via town or superior court in Mass., we shall formulate a plan of action," said Collins. He did not say what the plan would entail.

RSO budget may be cut, Fonda tabled

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to amend a 15 percent cut of most Recognized Student Organization budgets to 12 percent. The Senate tabled a vote on the amendment until next week.

Also tabled was a motion to charge an admission fee for the Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden Sept. 30 appearance sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program.

Both decisions were tabled because senate constitution by-laws state that a week's notice must be given before any amendments are either considered or voted on.

The cuts, which will be made in all RSO budgets—except the Collegian, Third World Affajrs Office, Transit services and stabilization and capital equipment costs—are necessary to liquidate the senate's $184,797.63 deficit, said senate co-President Brian Burke.

The deficit was incurred, Burke said, because UMass students have the services and now we are paying for them. We should have paid for the services and then had them."

If the 12 percent cut is not passed next week, new motions will be considered.

Cut proponent and senate co-Treasurer Pat Hart said the senate's liquidating its deficit would allow no further increase in the student activities tax fee until 1982. Liquidation of the budget would also show the administration that the senate can run its budget affectively, Hart said.

Agreeing, Senator Bob Cleary said, "If the senate would work with the administration instead of against it more would get accomplished," and the feelings of ill-will would be diminished.

UMass considers withdrawal from ECAC

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

Recommendation of voluntary withdrawal from the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (E.C.A.C.) came yesterday from the UMass Executive Committee of the Athletic Council as action before UMass could be voted out by general membership on September 26.

The committee told Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff, who also acts as Assistant to the Chancellor for Athletics, that pull-out be made before the ECAC general membership meets.

It was also learned at the meeting that Dean Bischoff will meet today with UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler.

The decision to withdraw from the ECAC results from a television pact that UMass signed with the Eastern Athletic Association to televise UMass and Eastern Eight (EAA) basketball games this winter.

The signing of the contract was in violation of the ECAC articles of membership which state that no ECAC team may broadcast a game between the hours of noon and six p.m. on Saturday or Sunday if an ECAC game televised in connection with NBC and TVS is scheduled to appear.

DDB Associates, a Natick, Mass. based firm, and the Hughes Television Network have announced that the EAA game of the week telecasts will commence on January 5 when defending league champion Rutgers University is hosted by UMass. UMass is scheduled to make a second television appearance on February 9 when the Minutemen host Villanova.

The telecasting crew for the games will consist of former Boston Celtics superstar, Bob Cousy, Dom Valentino, former announcer for the New Orleans (Utah) Jazz, and a third member yet to be decided.

"The TV series is another major step in the rapid development of the Eastern Eight," said league executive director Leland Byrd in a press release. "Regular season competition between member schools has been both outstanding and exciting during the past three years."

"The league now points proudly to its own TV game-of-the-week, a series that promises to provide greater regular television exposure than ever before for the league's great teams and outstanding players," he said.

An Eastern Airlines mechanic exits the aft section of a DC-9 after preparing it for a federally-ordered inspection in Miami, yesterday. Airlines inspectors are checking for cracks in the aft bulkhead, an emergency door jamb and bulkhead skin. (AP Laserphoto.)

DC-9's checked for cracks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airline mechanics across the United States made detailed inspections of DC-9 passenger jets yesterday under government orders prompted by the discovery of cracks in the rear section of some planes.

The cracks were found in the rear bulkheads of four DC-9s operated by Air Canada after a bulkhead failed and knocked the tail cone off one of the airline's planes Monday. The craft made a safe landing in Boston.

Prompted by that finding, the Federal Aviation Administration sent an airworthiness directive yesterday morning to all U.S. airlines operating DC-9s. The FAA ordered special inspections of the planes' bulkheads, which form a wall sealing the rear of the passenger cabin.

Police check papal flim-flam

BOSTON (AP) — Police are probing reports that flim-flam artists are preying on the elderly by selling them phony tickets to the Oct. 1 papal Mass on Boston Common.

State Rep. Michael F. Flaherty said conmen pretending to be representatives of the Boston Archdiocese are going doorto door, selling the worthless tickets for $4.50 apiece.

Pope John Paul II is slated to celebrate the late afternoon Mass on Boston Common surrounded by a crowd estimated at 170,000 people. Officials said the historic park will be open on a first come first serve basis for the papal mass.

"The Mass on the Boston Common is free to everyone," said Flaherty, a South Boston Democrat. "These con schemers are committing a most heinous crime playing on the emotions of the elderly who do not have enough money to meet their needs as it is."

City chided for Boston racism

BOSTON (AP) — The headmaster of South Boston High School, disrupted by a new wave of racial trouble, chastised city leaders yesterday for failing to appeal for calm.

For the second day in a row yesterday, buses loaded with black pupils were pelted with rocks as they rolled through South Boston on their way to the high school.

"I can't believe that not a single politician or government leader has spoken out in any way," said Headmaster Jerome Winegar.

Winegar was chosen by federal Judge W. Arthur Garrity 3½ years ago to oversee the school, which has been disrupted by racial disturbances since it was integrated in 1974.

"This city is the craziest place I've ever been," he said. "I don't understand why, with all the people running for office, that someone can't say that we've gone beyond this, that we should just cool it.

"The folks who are in charge of this city don't seem to care what happens here. Maybe they hope this school will fall into the ocean."

Egbert case puzzles police, parents — no clues

By JENNIFER GAVIN
Associated Press Writer

EAST LANSING, Mich. — The fall term opens this week at Michigan State University, but officials say they don't expect 16-year-old James Dallas Egbert III back on the campus from which he vanished for a month for reasons still a mystery to even his parents.

Before the computer science whiz turned up safe last week, police and private detectives, fearing he might be dead, conducted extensive searches of the subterranean entrails of the campus.

The full story of his strange vanishing act perhaps is known only to the young man himself, and he is undergoing medical care near Dallas.

"It's still a mystery to me," the youth's father, James Dallas Egbert II, said in a telephone interview Tuesday from Dayton, Ohio, where he is a practicing optometrist. "I don't think there's any actual proof of foul play."

Egbert said the full story may eventually come out, but added, "I'm not going to push for it."

Young Egbert, who has an IQ of 145, was picked up last Thursday at an undisclosed location after disappearing from the campus on Aug. 15. He was found by William Dear, a Texas private investigator hired by the family.

Egbert, a sophomore at the university, was hunted for days in steam tunnels under the campus where he was known to act out a medieval fantasy game called "Dungeons and Dragons." The search later shifted to Wisconsin, where a convention of devotees of the game was held.

He was located after he made a series of emotional predawn phone calls to Dear. The detective says three other unidentified persons — two men and a woman — are linked to the disappearance, but have been promised they won't be prosecuted by the Egbert family.

The youth's father thinks the detective is not telling everything he knows.

"I think without a doubt William Dear knows the complete story," Egbert said.

But Dear insisted he hasn't questioned young Egbert, even though he says he's as close to him as anybody.

"I know when we tried to talk to him on the plane, it upset him," Dear said. "Once I feel that he's okay, maybe he'll remember — I'm not sure he remembers."

Officials at Michigan State University say they do not expect James Dallas Egbert III back on campus after he disappeared for a month for reasons that have not yet been explained. (AP Laserphoto.)

Israel blasts U.S. weakness

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A top Israeli official accused the United States of "showing weakness" in an unusual public shouting match that underscores differences between the two countries.

"You are soft," Defense Minister Ezer Weizman told Assistant Secretary of State Harold Saunders at the height of the exchange. "You lost Ethiopia. You lost Angola. And you lost Iran."

In a tense exchange lasting more than an hour, Saunders, known as a soft-spoken diplomat, fired back that bombing southern Lebanon ultimately will prove to be a foreign policy disaster for Israel.

"I'm warning you, Lebanon will be your Vietnam," Saunders told Weizman.

But Weizman, Israel's first air force chief, did not yield.

"Don't tell me how to do anything," he said. And he then criticized U.S. policy in Ethiopia, Angola and Iran.

The argument, in English, was carried on during a Saturday night cocktail party at the home of Israeli Ambassador Ephraim Evron. The guests included Defense Secretary Harold Brown and U.S. Middle East mediator Robert Strauss, but they had left before Saunders and Weizman, leaning on a bar in a paneled wood alcove, had their dispute.

Israeli reports said it apparently was set off when Saunders admonished Weizman that the United States was not completely consulted on an Egyptian-Israeli plan to patrol the Sinai Desert.

"Is this called friendship?" Saunders reportedly asked.

Faced with published accounts of their dispute, Weizman and Saunders went out of their way Wednesday to project a spirit of good fellowship.

Reporters were advised to assemble in the lobby of the State Department where the two ministers, breaking off talks about Sinai peacekeeping operations, appeared.

"I was very sorry it blew up like that," Weizman said. "But this is it, this is a democracy."

Weizman called Saunders a friend and said, "Today we were very calm, and as usual, extremely friendly."

One of the differences between the United States and Israel is Israel's policy of bombing Palestinian outposts in southern Lebanon, sometimes with the loss of civilian life. On Wednesday, through spokesman Carter, the United States again criticized the raids.

The Israeli defense minister, in the exchange Saturday night with Saunders, said the problem is that 15,000 armed Palestine Liberation Organization personnel are in southern Lebanon, along with 30,000 Syrian troops.

Shaking a finger at the assistant secretary, Weizman went on: "If one more rocket, one more shell, falls on northern Israel, what happened in Lebanon last month will be child's play."

The U.S. official pressed Weizman for "some commitment" from Israel not to resume the raids.

Iranian students walk out

Forum 'not democratic' they say

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

A forum sponsored by the Spartacus Youth League to discuss recent events in Iran resulted in an argry walkout of Iranian students last night.

Iranian students who oppose the league's contention that the Ayatollah Khomeini government is oppressive and that there should be a workers revolution in Iran left the meeting en masse after being told by forum moderator Oliver Stephens to either "shut up or get out."

Forum's speaker, Crystal Colby, a member of the central committee of the league, called the Khomeini government "a bunch of reactionaries whose guns are aimed at the left." Colby said the league opposed Khomeini before he assumed power and called for an "independent proletarian axis" to govern Iran. She also said Kurds are "more oppressed under Khomeini than the shah."

The forum was held under tight security provided by the league. Those attending were searched and league members lined the walls. Before the meeting started Security Chief Gene Herson, holding a pair of black leather gloves said, "If anyone disrupts this meeting they will get a fist in the face."

In a discussion following the speech one Iranian student called Colby's speech "a complete lie." Others said Colby should go to Iran and see things for herself.

League supporters said Iranian women and homosexuals are oppressed and one Iranian woman agreed.

But when she said women were shot for adultery and imprisoned for wearing bathing suits, several Iranian students tried to speak out of order, and left at Stephen's suggestion.

The student shouted and said the forum was not democratic. Their exit was assisted by several of the guards.

An argument ensued in the hallway outside the meeting room in the Campus Center for several minutes before the students angrily left.

The purpose of the forum, Colby said, was to "win revolutionary minded students to our point of view through demonstrating vindication of our unique position on Iran."

Cuban visit in sight for anthro students

By STEVE WHITE
Collegian Staff

Hoping to broaden political insight, a group of UMass anthropology students this intersession will be traveling to Cuba, said Anthropology Professor Johnetta Cole.

The travelling seminar is a follow-up to Professor Johnetta Cole's course, "Cuba: Culture, Revolution, and Revolutionary Culture." A similar trip was made last year by 15 students and 12 professionals who had special interest in Cuba.

Cole explained that this trip has been possible since the travel ban imposed in 1961 was lifted in 1976. She said although travel between the United States and Cuba is now legal, "information is difficult to come by. The seminar is intended to fill the information void."

Last year's seminar lasted 10 days and consisted of a planned schedule of events during mornings and afternoons with free evening time, Cole said. The planned events consisted of various cultural events and of lectures covering such topics as Cuban ethnic and cultural history.

She said two cultural events were a Santeria religious ritual and a concert by Grupo Moncada. During their spare time, students were free to explore the city of Havana, visiting clinics, factories, farms, and schools.

Cole said there were no restrictions placed on their travel in and around Havana.

The activities were arranged by the Cuban Inststute for Friendship Among People, Cole said, with assistance from Dr. Raphael Lopez-Valdez, an anthropologist with the Academy of Sciences in Cuba. The group stayed in Havana and all scheduled events and side trips were in the Havana area.

Cole said an important difference in this year's trip is that it involves a great deal of travel within Cuba. She said the group plans to fly from Havana to Santiago and later return to Havana by bus, providing a close up view of the countryside.

Although the main topic of the seminar was "The African Base of Cuban Culture," many students were interested in Cuba as an alternative form of society, Cole said. She said they were particularly impressed by the free education system, the literacy campaign, health care programs, and the attack on institutionalized racism.

Cole said her own interest in Cuba began as an interest in West Africa. A study of West Africans displaced to the New World developed. She described Cuba as an African based culture in the Western Hemisphere, which, in combination with its Spanish base and socialist form of government, makes an interesting culture to study.

The number of Amherst scholars with interest and expertise in Cuba makes the area atypical, Cole said. This concentration of Cuba experts and student enthusiasm points to the formation of an Institute for Cuban Studies as a long term goal, she said. The institute is "inevitable due to interest in the area," she said, "a responsibility due to the lack of information in English on Cuba."

The first seminar was successful due to student preparation and their enthusiasm for the subject, Cole said.

She said she believes strongly in active education with learning through experience and participation. The only problems were financial ones, Cole said. It cost each student $700 to make the trip.

Banned

Soviet say 'nyet' to book by UMass sociology prof

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

"Soviet and American Society: A Comparison," a book by UMass sociology professor Paul Hollander, has been banned in the Soviet Union.

The banned book compares major aspects of American and Russian society "including major social institutions such as political institutions and social stratification, education, dominant social values, family, and many others," Hollander said.

The book, which sells for $7.95, is Hollander's second and was researched for about five years, he said.

The book's second edition came out last year in paperback. The 1973 hardcover edition sold 7500 copies over five years.

Hollander said of the reasons for the Russian censorship: "it doesn't follow official Soviet point of view on these matters."

"It doesn't present a polarized version of the two societies of Soviet inferiority and U.S. superiority. From the Soviet point of view, the Soviet Union has no more important social problems and I haven't taken this position," he said.

"To the Soviet Union, saying the two societies share a certain problem is almost as undesirable as saying the United States is far superior to them," he said.

"The official Soviet line is, in every dimension, the Soviet Union is superior and the U.S. inferior and I am critical of many Soviet practices," said Hollander.

The book points out shared social problems such as crime and alcoholism, but "there is no black and white confrontation in the book, no mirror image of the Soviet Union to the United States with the U.S. as being superior in every way. I don't portray the U.S. as being superior to the Soviet Union in every aspect," said Hollander.

"I also point out the serious problems American society has," he said.

"I prefer the United States to the Soviet Union--that's why I'm here--but of course I am critical of many aspects of American society without rejecting it completely," said Hollander.

Hollander said he found out the book was banned by reading about it in the New York Times.

"I didn't even know it was taken there (to Russia)," he said.

Hollander's book, which is translated into Japanese, is the only comparitive book of America and the Soviet Union from a sociological perspective.

Hollander, who has never visited Russia, was thinking about the book for a "few years" before actually writing it, he said, and found it difficult to determine which material was the most important.

"I had to make difficult decisions as to what comparisons to make," said Hollander.

"As a teacher and researcher I especially appreciate the freedom of expression and you don't find that in the Soviet Union," he said.

Hollander's first book, "American and Soviet Society: A Reader in Comparitive Sociology and Perspective" was released in 1969.

Hollander, 46, was born in Budapest and lived in Hungary until 1956. He attended the London School of Economics and received his PHD from Princeton University in 1963.

Campus government sets wheels rolling

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

Business is underway this week for all area governments, according to respective presidents.

Although only the Central Area Government, the Southwest Assembly and the Orchard Hill Area Government have held official meetings, the other presidents and co-presidents this week said they have been planning agendas for their upcoming meetings.

Central Area President Paul Washburn said in a phone interview Monday night's meeting consisted mostly of planning for the use of the area's $15,000.

"We have to figure out what we need most," Washburn said. "My personal goal is to make the $15,000 go as far as I can for the people in the area," he said.

President of Southwest Assembly Scott Shuster said Tuesday night's meeting dealt with a need for study space in that living area. "With the library being out of commission," Shuster said, "We intend to use Hampden Dining Commons fully for study space."

According to Tim Gallagher, president of the Orchard Hill Area Government, there have been two "opening meetings" which dealt mainly with the problem of "noise on the hill."

"The government as a whole has decided that people must keep noise down to a reasonable level," Gallagher said in a telephone interview. OHAG will be circulating a newsletter on the matter, Gallagher said.

The first meeting of the Northeast Area Government will be held next Monday night in the Thatcher basement. President Christopher Decker said he hopes "to plan a lot of things that will benefit the most people in Northeast."

Sylvan Area co-president David Klein will be speaking at the Northeast meeting to ask for funding for Sylvan's computer center.

"The computer center in Sylvan is closed because of budget cuts and we're trying to get $2,000 to re-open it," Klein said Tuesday night.

Decker said he didn't know if his government would vote on the proposed $1,000 for the computers or table it until the next meeting.

The first meeting of the Sylvan government hasn't been announced yet, according to Klein, because, "We're waiting for Cashin, Brown, and McNamara to organize and get their representatives together."

Klein said he expected the first meeting to take place within the next week.

Corporate games mastered

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — No lamb venturing into the world of corporate wolves need wander blindly ever again. Indeed, the mind boggles at the choices facing a woman who wants to learn her way around the corporate world.

She can attend a host of workshops and seminars that purport to tutor female beginners on corporate politics.

She can buy books like "Games Mother Never Taught You; Corporate Gamesmanship for Women," or "Winning at Office Politics," or "The Woman's Dress for Success Book," or "Business as a Game," or "Think Like a Man, Act Like a Lady, Work Like a Dog."

Everybody, it seems, is trying to help — and to cash in on a good thing: the new demand in business for women to fill executive and management jobs and the soaring number of women with a new ambition to pursue careers — not just jobs — in the corporate world.

But academic and corporate experts warn that an ambitious woman who masters the fashionable "corporate gamesmanship" approach to getting ahead may be doing herself more harm than good.

"You can carry these things too far," says Pat Carlson, a senior management development consultant with Prudential Insurance in Newark. "What I'm finding now among young women is more and more concern with gamesmanship and not enough concern about doing the job."

Dr. Margaret Hennig, co-director of the graduate program in management at Simmons College in Boston, calls the corporate gamesmanship approach "gimmicky," and adds: "You cannot deal with sophisticated problems like these by talking in banalities."

"I don't see that these seminars do much good — all this stuff is so fundamental, so basic, that a smart woman picks it up instantly," says Thomas Hubbard, president of THinc Career Planning Corp.

Lawrence D. Schwimmer disagrees. Schwimmer, a 33-yearold former food industry executive, heads Schwimmer & Associates Inc. in Chicago. His firm offers seminars on gamesmanship for women at $225 a head.

"Women are in a sorry state," Schwimmer says. "They're not doing so well. I give them a real-world emphasis — here's what is really happening to you, here's how you're being exploited."

Schwimmer says — and many academic and corporate experts agree — that women frequently lack "savyness" about the rules and customs of the male-dominated business world. Most of his clients, he says, are corporations who send women employees for basic training.

"You'd be surprised, for instance, how many women have never asked for a raise and if you've never asked for a raise, you're not even considered a serious player," Schwimmer says.

Paula Callery, a 16-year veteran of International Business Machines who now works for the U.S. Department of Commerce, says "Women coming into middle management positions do need to learn how to be team players, but I'm annoyed at all this gimmickry.

"It troubles me to see women set aside as a category. I don't believe women need separate training. There are fundamental tools that men and women can get in the same programs."

A recent young woman graduate of Harvard Business School, says, "we had a course on human behavior and the organization. Some of the cases dealt with problems unique to women and minority managers and supervisors."

But,she says, there was a caveat: "Frankly, the course was poorly executed. It's sort of considered a joke. It's the easy course. No one puts much thought into it."

While Hubbard believes it is tougher for women than for men to get ahead in the corporate world, he doesn't think women need to enroll in special seminars:

"I'd say if you're going to go to seminars and workshops, go to the ones the men you compete with are going to. You'll win a lot more quickly."

Sickness: 'Don't get screwed

To the Editor

This is a letter addressed to students who plan to get sick: Be sure you know what you're getting with the U.Mass. Student Health Program and the Supplemental Insurance Policy—don't get screwed like I did when you get sick.

Last spring I was treated by a UHS physician, who determined that I needed to see a local specialist for a fiber optic bronchioscopy, and referred me to Dr. John M. Parsons of Florence, a thoracic surgeon. Now I had the mandatory student fee, plus the supplemental insurance.

You would think that UHS would cover all or most of this charge, wouldn't you? Wrong!

The physician's charge was 260.00; UHS paid only $62.50. What is the problem? Dr. Parsons is a "non-participating physician," and UHS is liable for only "175 percent of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield usual and customary charge" for this service. Well, Blue Cross's charge is $50.00, which leaves me still $25.00 short of their stated liability. But what about the rest, the $162.50? That's the part I am royally stuck with.

And to top it off, the $260.00 charge is way out of line with other thoracic surgeons of the area [Dr. Grimm asks about $150.00 for the same procedure].

My conclusions are [a] some local physicians are making a lot of money unfairly, and [b] UHS knows about it and fails to tell students what they're liable for.

Forrest S. Stoddard

...someone who checked it out

To the Editor:

Are you tired of the UMass Shuffle? Well I certainly am. Have you tried to cash a check on campus this week? I have, and it is becoming increasingly difficult. Not only has the maximum limit been reduced from one hundred dollars to fifty dollars, but the location for such transactions has been changed from the Bursar's office in Whitmore to a cashier's desk in the Campus Center.

Unfortunately the cashier's desk has not been opened as of yet! If you are a student who is lucky enough to have your own savings or checking account in a local off-campus bank you have no problem. But if you are a student, like myself, who relies on incoming two-party checks which have to be cashed on campus because off campus banks just guffaw at the idea of accepting such checks than you are a prime target for a second rate ploy to increase student financial expenditures at the University store in the Campus Center.

Irish injustice said 'unjust'

To the Editor:

I am at a loss to understand Kevin Barry O'Meara's over-reaction to Peter Smerdon's reasoned article on the Northern Ireland situation. The fact that the IRA is fighting for a cause doesn't necessarily legitimize that cause, and it certainly doesn't justify their means.

If Mr. O'Meara, amid all the bold, rude bluster of a man thousands of miles away from the problem, thinks he is enlightening us all by saying that the seed of the Irish troubles is 'injustice' then let him tell us something new.

As UMass limps along

Chris Gray

First there was the Tillson Heating Plant fiasco. (Sometimes I wonder if I'm the only one who is still amazed that the University spent millions on an oil-fueled heating plant that worked for a few weeks, broke down, and now sits inoperative behind Orchard Hill as a constant embarrassment to anyone associated with this place). Then there was the Campus Center Garage, a brilliant and necessary piece of construction, (who parks there anyway?) which is now falling apart piece by piece.

Now the dilemma of a drastic drop in the quality of a UMass education has been enlarged to affect every student on this campus. The world's tallest library has been shut down due to the hazard of falling bricks. Now every student on this campus will have to deal with grossly inadequate library services. It is essential for a university to have a properly functioning library. Yet, it has been pretty much accepted that our 28-story collection of knowledge will be a 28-story waste of space for the upcoming year.

Despite Herculean efforts by the library staff, the attempt to transport books and services to Goodell Hall will just not make it. (That Goodell was scheduled to be closed this year for remodeling is adding further insult to injury.) Students, and there are quite a few who take their studies seriously, are obviously going to be hampered in any attempt at academic research. Grad students, who have been known to take up residence in library carrels, face insurmountable frustration. Numerous projects and papers will have to be cancelled or extended. Those students in majors requiring them to use the Grad Research, or Morrill Libraries, will now have to move over and make room for the flow of students with no place to study, thus reducing the efficiency of their departments. No one is immune; not even our neighbors in the Five-College area. The libraries at Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire are presently shuddering at the thought of a mass exodus of Umies (I hate that term) to their respective campuses.

The list goes on and on; lost work-study positions, the annoyance of having to walk around the library, the danger of all those bricks falling...it's unbelievable. A university without a library is inconceivable. But this is what UMass faces in the year ahead.

It is doubtful that the University will be offering refunds to disgruntled students. How, then, is one to react? The concerned student will be angry and look to place the blame with someone. The "administration" is a good place to start. ("Administration" meaning the whole State House-University apparatus)

When things go wrong, fingers are immediately pointed at those evil, cunning, and greedy bureaucrats who can complicate the most basic of tasks with incredible ease. The pointing is usually done with a great deal of justification.

The "administration" can probably be best understood as an ever fattening leech attached to the animal known as "quality education", slowly but surely sucking the life out of its victim.

It was some committee in the "administration" that contracted the building of the library to some firm in Holyoke that proceeded to build a structure with some 6000 tons of brick facing on top of supports that could only stand the pressure of two-thirds that weight. That was done seven years ago. For seven years those bricks have been putting pressure on those supports, but it wasn't until recently that we're told that there is a real danger of the whole mess tumbling down. The danger could not have arrived overnight; it has always been there.

To blame the "administration" is easy. To blame the contracting firm is easy. It is true that both were negligent and most likely corrupt; but to stop here is misleading. We should investigate further, and ask questions like why the state of Massachusetts does not properly fund its public education system? And why does it hire incompetent frims in an effort to cut costs? Why do contracting firms use cheap materials and make stupid mistakes in their efforts to cut costs? Why this concern about cutting costs? These questions require an in-depth analysis of our capitalist economic structure and the role the government plays in it. Such an analysis is not convenient here. What is important enough to realize is that there are no easy scapegoats.

Unfortunately in today's complex, bureaucratic, world this is not enough. An "administration" is also required to make a university. At UMass, the "administration" does not seem to function well. UMass students have just as much reason to be proud of their work as do students at the so-called "prestigious" schools. Yet, it is difficult to develop pride and confidence at a school that is literally, and figuratively, falling apart.

And so UMass limps along.

Is 'Teddy ready'? or who will be V.P.?

Jim Moran

And now, from the same people who brought you "Airport '77" and "Roots: The Next Generation," we present: "Camelot Three." Think of the night life in Washington and its rejuvenation. Think of an entourage of reporters going to Colorado and the White Mountains on ski junkets with the First Family. And yes, think of the levity to be interjected into White House press conferences. Fly in Pierre Salinger from France! Teddy is ready!!

But is the United States ready for Edward Moore Kennedy? One need only look at the public propaganda of President Jimmy Carter and compare it with his government's policies to answer that question. In 1976, Jimmy Carter said "...We pledge ourselves to the support of legislation that will make every responsible effort to reduce adult unemployment to 3 percent within 4 years." Yet Carter's policies have contradicted his statements. He delayed, stalled and weakened the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Act in its legislative battles, and even when he did sign the measure he ignored it for the sake of inflation obscession. In fact, Jimmy Carter sounded downright Republican when he set a goal to increase unemployment from 5.8 percent to 6.2 percent by 1980. Rising prices are a legitimate concern. But if people do not have jobs, they cannot pay any prices, be they rising or stable.

On energy, Carter has contradicted his party's philosophy again. "We support the legal prohibition against corporate ownership of competing types of energy, such as oil and coal." That was the candidate in 1976. What did the President do in 1979? He supported legislation to deregulate the oil industry, and sat back while the utilities' profits rolled in in the wake of the decontrolling measure. But after all, we can forgive him. Jimmy's a good Democrat.

On programs to aid the disadvantaged, Jimmy has a very good record indeed. He's made massive cuts in CETA, Social Security, Education, Urban Aid, Environmental Protection and Occupational Safety and Health Protections.

Good show, good show.

Finally, look at the president's "National Health Insurance" plan. It is the most repressive, ineffective piece of social legislation proposed since the New Deal. Instead of providing the full coverage necessary for citizens who cannot afford the high insurance premiums, Carter's plan limits benefits to basic medical and catastrophic illness costs, catering to the Blue Cross-Blue Shield and Prudential think tanks.

And even after all these negative policies, (there's more), Jimmy Carter has the balls to ask the Democratic Party to renominate him!

Perhaps Senator John Durkin, D-N.H., put it best, when he said, "Jimmy Carter is the only President in the history of the United States to receive on-the-job training." Durkin added, "Jimmy Carter is the most expensive work-study program this country has ever paid for."

But with Carter dismissed, who do the Democrats really have? Jerry Brown?

Enough said.

The Democratic Party has no nominee who can lead this nation in a manner consistent with the working-class-oriented philosophy of the party. No one except Ted Kennedy.

In his 17 years as a United States Senator from Masachusetts, Ted Kennedy has been a leader of the reform-directed measures inherent with the government that began with the New Deal. In the last seven years, he has championed the causes of the old New Left, leading the way on such issues as anti-trust legislation, judicial and penal reform, preventitive and socialized medicine, the windfall profits tax, and civil rights. He is a supporter of the ERA, gay rights, abortion rights, gun control legislation, affirmative action, and much more. He is the author of "National Health Insurance," and unlike Carter's plan, Kennedy's bill is geared toward full medical benefits, allowing for basic, dental, psychiatric, and specialized medical coverage. He is the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, where he has worked on recodification of the outdated Federal criminal statutes.

One might argue that a good voting record alone does not qualify him to be President. Can he lead the nation? What about foreign policy? If Kennedy's successful efforts to give dissidents emmigration status, as he did with the Katz family of the Soviet Union, then Kennedy is a fine diplomat. He has supported SALT II, which gives him a good bargaining base with the Soviets. He has visited China and advocated formal diplomatic ties with that nation long before the idea was a twinkle in Jimmy Carter's calculating eye. And of course, he is a strong supporter of Israel, which can score points with the ever-decreasing number of democracies around the world.

And, oh yes, he can work well with Congress. He was once Senate Majority Whip.

Strategy wise, Kennedy has no chance of obtaining the nomination through a draft at the convention. He will enter the early primaries, though he may let Governor Brown "spoil" Carter in the first few contests. His running mate, my source tells me, will definitely be a Southerner. The names given are: Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, and Sen. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas. Robert Healy's column in the September 14 Boston Globe said Kennedy had made the decision to run. This columnist has it on good word that Healy's story was accurate. I am told Healy was instructed not to print what he learned, less he jeopardize his "line of communication" with the Kennedy camp. Obviously, Healy did not worry himself too much about losing the Kennedy ties. He printed the story.

As Boston journalist Danny Schechter, of WBCN-FM, said on a broadcast last summer, Senator Edward Kennedy represents the "best of the worst." Considering our monopolistic two party system, which lends no support to a truly democratic "multi-party" system, nothing short of a revolution could put in office a leader more adept to the ideals and needs of the American people than Senator Edward M. Kennedy. And as Jimmy Carter said himself, in 1976, "Why not the best?"

King administration pardons

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Edward J. King acted on the first pardons of his administration yesterday.

In addition to the 10 pardons, King submitted two judgeship nominations to the Executive Council, including William J. McManus, former councillor who has been probate register, to succeed Gerald D. McLellan as judge of Worcester Probate Court.

The council voted unanimously Wednesday to confirm Peter F. Brady, 46, of Lynnfield, a former assistant district attorney, as a Superior Court judge.

Brady, educated at St. John's Seminary and Boston College Law School, fills one of the judgeships created in last year's court restructuring law.

King also approved the disability retirement, because of a heart condition, of Lynn District Court Judge Thomas M. Newth, 68. The former Republican representative from Swampscott, was named to the post in 1973 and would retire as of Oct. 31.

King has twice been criticized publicly by Councillor Patrick J. "Sonny" McDonough, D-Boston, for not moving on requests for pardons that had been cleared by the Parole Board.

Some of the 10 pardon proposals were for people who served jail terms, and others were arrested for narcotics violations. But most were convicted of relatively minor offenses. Pardons were sought for several reasons, including better employment opportunities and for permits to carry a gun.

House kills government pay raise

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House first passed, and then killed, an amendment to give itself and top-paid government bureacrats a 7 percent cost-ofliving raise.

Rejection of the hike yesterday came after the House had approved, on a head-count vote in which no names were recorded, an amendment that would give congressmen and senators a $4,025-a-year pay hike.

The amendment also would have given a 7 percent pay hike to all bureaucrats and federal judges who make more than $47,500 a year.

It was the second time this year the House has passed a pay raise only to kill it at the last minute. In June, it accepted an amendment to hike its $57,500-a-year pay by 5.5 percent but then turned around and killed the bill to which the increase was attached.

Rejection of the bill yesterday — on a 219-191 vote — killed not only the pay raise but also a resolution that is needed to provide emergency funding for a variety of federal departments after Oct. 1.

The funding bill is necessary because the House has not passed the normal legislation needed to fund those departments after that date, which is the start of the new fiscal year.

The final vote to kill the bill was a surprise. Pay raise opponents had been able to attract only the support of 34 members when they attempted to get a roll call vote on passage of the 7 percent pay raise.

And they attracted only 64 votes when the House voted 156-64 to pass the pay raise amendment. That vote was taken by head count and no names were recorded.

But when it came down to the final vote — a roll call that put each member on record as supporting or rejecting the overall bill — the outcome was far different.

Amherst Police are looking for this man for questioning in connection with an assault and battery on a female hitchhiker on Wednesday, September 12. The subject is described as a clean-shaven white male wearing blue jeans and a white tee shirt. He is reported to have light brown hair, a medium height and a medium to heavy build. Two men injured

Two Massachusetts men were injured in a major three-vehicle crash at the Meadow Street bypass on Rt. 116 Tuesday afternoon.

Alvin C. Mederian, 63, of Munson, is in satisfactory condition with multiple fractured ribs in the Wing Memorial Hospital in Palmer, and Lloyd E. May, 44, of Turners Falls was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton with leg injuries.

Mederian was stopped at a red light on his Honda motorcycle, with May's car also at a stop behind him in the northbound lane. A third car, driven by Michael J. Florio, 33, of Northampton, also travelling north, was unable to stop and rammed May's car, pushing it into the motorcycle and driving both vehicles through the intersection.

Florio was charged with operating a motor vehicle in a reckless manner.

In an unrelated incident, police report that unknown vandals wrenched the door to the football press box from its hinges at the Amherst Regional High School later that evening.

Stonehenge solved - again

By NIKKI FINKE
Associated Press

MOSCOW — A Soviet scientist claims he and his colleagues have solved the riddle of England's mysterious Stonehenge, saying it was built as a model for the planets in the Earth's solar system.

In an interview with the official news agency, Tass, sent on its wire yesterday, Vladimir Avinsky, a prominent geologist and minerologist, did not dispute recently espoused theories that Stonehenge is actually an ancient but sophisticated astronomical observatory. But he said he believes he has discovered another amazing attribute for it.

Researchers have speculated that Stonehenge's circle of stones are positioned so they can accurately determine time for lunar and solar years, and even be used as a navigational guide to get bearings by the stars.

Avinsky said in the interview with Tass that Working with colleague Vladimir Tereshin, "we succeeded in discovering a pentagram in the complex and mysterious geometry of Stonehenge which, as it seems to us, was used as a basis for its arrangement and carries information on the size of the planets of the solar system."

Sometimes described as the eighth wonder of the world, Stonehenge is a circle of huge stones standing on Salisbury Plain in Wiltshire, England.

Netmen lose in EAA finals

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Strong doubles play, the kind demonstrated in the recently held Eastern Athletic Association tournament, could prove to be a decisive factor for the UMass men's tennis team this fall.

The number three doubles team consisting of Dan Gallagher and Neil Mackertish fought some tough competition, but fought hard, advancing to the tourney finals. They lost a heart breaker in three sets, slipping in the third, 6-3.

Dave Nowak and Sergio Strepman, playing first doubles, fell in the first round, thus advancing to the consolation round. The steady, consistent style of the two advanced them to the finals where they split sets, then led 4-1 in the third. They failed to hold the lead losing the set and match 6-4.

Mark Huetteman and Matt Modlish walked over all opponents in the consolation round, advancing to and winning the finals in straight sets, 6-2, 7-6.

"I'm especially pleased with the doubles," said coach Steve Williams. "They played well," he said, and "are expected to show their strength throughout the season.

The Netmen didn't fare as well in singles competition but third singles Nowak proved to be a bright spot. The UMass senior fought his way to the finals but lost in straight sets, 6-0, 6-2.

The "hard luck story" is told by Williams. "Our guys played the eventual winners in the first round in five out of six matches," he said.

Despite the unsuccessful singles play, and the fact that the top two players have graduated, Williams expresses optimism about the singles competition.

"This year has been a rebuilding year, and we've done quite well," he said. "We're just as strong down the line as last year. Everyone's improving and that's what we needed to do."

Huetteman, who played well and had a successful spring season, will be leading the Netmen playing first singles. Huetteman played fifth and sixth singles this past spring and third singles last fall.

Strepman, another veteran, worked his way to second singles after playing in the fifth spot last spring. Strepman is just coming back from a sprained ankle, an injury that hindered him in EAA competition.

Nowak will again be playing third singles for UMass, a position he occupied in the spring.

A newcomer to the team, Modlish, will be playing in the fourth singles spot. A strong player, Modlish will be important in filling in a gap caused by the departure of three of UMass' singles players.

Gallagher has also moved up from playing mostly doubles in the spring to fifth singles.

Mackertish, another newcomer will occupy the sixth singles spot.

The Netmen face the University of Rhode Island tomorrow at two o'clock on the upper Boyden tennis courts.

Booters earn tie in OT thriller

By DAVID BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

BRIDGEPORT, Ct. — The UMass soccer squad opened its season last night with a thrilling 2-2 tie in Bridgeport, CT. Bridgeport't Graig Cariglia scored with only one minute and 47 seconds left in the 20 minute overtime period to earn the tie for Bridgeport. The Minutemen had been on top by virtue of Tony Dias second goal of the night at 6:14 of the overtime to make it 2-1 UMass.

"We had it and we let it off the hook," related UMass coach Russ Kidd after the contest. Tri-captain Mark Vassalotti added "They made us play the way they wanted us to play."

Earlier in the game, Bridgeport's Bruce Brennan put his team on top 1-0 at 3:09 of the first half when he beat Minutemen netminder Mark Marilla. Just over nine minutes later, Dias scored his first of the night ot knot things up at 1-1 where it remained until his second tally in overtime.

The tie gives the University of Bridgeport a 1-2-1 record while UMass now stands at 0-0-1.

The Minutemen will try for their first win this Saturday when they travel south to play Southern Connecticut in a 1:30 contest.

"I had a long talk with Larry last summer," says Woolf — who also helped the player buy a house right next to Woolf's, in Brookline. "I told him basketball needs excitement and it's looking to him for help.

"He owes a lot to basketball and he owes it to himself to cooperate with everyone. I'd say he's become a lot more understanding of the press."

Bird did cause a furor some weeks ago when he was quoted as saying he'd quit basketball after his Celtics contract expires. In the aftermath, Bird recanted.

The Celtics are already banking on the big blond star. The team's season ticket sales already are up 10 percent and are expected to show a 20 percent jump by Oct. 12 when the regular season starts.

The signing of Bird, and Carr, are given credit for a chunk of the hike. The team now thinks it may exceed its season ticket mark of 6,000.

One of the most underpublicized teams on campus is the UMass Ultimate frisbee team which can be seen practicing across from the Southwest Horseshoe everyday at 3:30. (Staff photo by Jim Mahoney).

Ultimate frisbee comes of age

Frisbee. The plastic disc floats and soars across countless green lawns and open spaces every afternoon around UMass. Now there is an organized group of 30-50 frisbee enthusiasts who play a team sport called Ultimate frisbee on an intercollegiate level.

The UMass Ultimate frisbee team is an enthusiastic gang that is having a successful season so far, according to co-captain Reg Mimms. Last Saturday, UMass defeated North Adams, 22-9, and Williams College, 24-15. On Sunday, neighboring Hampshire College stopped UMass, 16-11.

Last year the team made the semi-finals in the Northwest Regionals before losing to Williams College by two goals.

On October 6 the Ultimate team will travel to Williams to participate in an eight-team tournament. Guiding the disc-tossers will be coaches Peter Holstoy and Doug Sullivan with captains Reg Mimms and Ross Heard on the field. The team keeps tuned by scrimmaging Hampshire College every Wednesday.

For those unfamiliar with Ultimate, the sport is fastmoving and exciting with "more running than soccer," according to Mimms. The game is played with seven men on a side. The field is 25 by 45 yards with 20 yard end zones. A goal is scored by passing to a teammate in the end zone. No body contact or running with the frisbee is allowed. A dropped or intercepted disc changes possession. The game requires top conditioning as well as skill in different methods of throwing and catching.

The Ultimate frisbee team is an RSO funded group that sells frisbees to raise extra money. They practice daily at 3:30 in the horseshoe across from Southwest.

Celtics Bird all set to fly

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press

BOSTON — He walks, he talks. He shoots, he scores. Larry Bird even smiles.

The richest and most heralded rookie in National Basketball Association history is ready to begin his pro career with the Boston Celtics.

And last season's college basketball player-of-the-year from Indiana State, the self-professed "hick from French Lick," is doing his level best to demonstrate he's happy to be here.

The 6-foot-9 forward, who shunned reporters last season — supposedly because he wanted his teammates to share the limelight — now talks to anyone who poses a question at Celtics workouts at Hellenic College in Brookline, Mass.

"I don't have any statistical goals," Bird said last week. "I just want to go out on the floor every night and give 100 percent."

Is playing in the NBA the realization of a lifelong dream?

"Not really," he answers. "When I was in college, all I thought about was college games. It's dangerous to think too far ahead. Now, it's a whole new game."

Bird is working hard in conditioning drills run by new Celtics Coach Bill Fitch. And after listening to Bird answer questions at a news conference — smiling, with a basketball tucked under his arm — Fitch agreed, "He (Bird) says all the right things. Of course, at this point, everyone says the right things. It's a long season."

The Celtics figure Bird will help them make the 1979-80 season last longer than the last two, when the team missed the playoffs and was battered by internal turmoil, often centering on controversial owner John Y. Brown.

Since spring, however, Brown sold out to partner Harry Mangurian — a quiet moneyman who has put Red Auerbach, the team president and general manager, back in full control of the talent.

Fitch and Auerbach are still looking for a playmaking guard — current candidates include veteran Nate Archibald and free agent Ricky Marsh — and a backup center, possibly Eric Fernsten, another free agent.

But on a more positive note, last year's player-coach Dave Cowens has returned strictly as a pivotman and is in excellent physical condition.

Auerbach signed free agent forward M.L. Carr, the former Detroit Pistons leader.

And after protracted negotiations, Bird agreed to a fiveyear contract worth more than $3 million.

Last August at a Celtics camp for rookies and free agents, Cowens and Carr showed up and worked in scrimmages with Bird.

After watching that trio storm up and down the court, spectator Tom Heinsohn, the former Celtics coach, announced: "The drought is over."

Fitch, the former Cleveland Cavaliers coach and general manager, is cautious, declining even to specify a likely team "role" for Bird. Discounting the summertime scrimmages, Fitch says his player evaluations officially began just about a week ago, when training camp started.

As for Bird, "It's too early. He can pass. He will score points. No one will run him out of the league on defense." But Fitch adds, "I really don't know too much about him yet."

Bird, however, seems intent on letting the sports world know more about him. He's been interviewed by several national publications and his lawyer, Bob Woolf, lined up a variety of product endorsements.

Sox top Jays, 8-0

TORONTO — Bob Stanley tossed a three-hit shutout and Butch Hobson paced a 13-hit Boston attack with a pair doubles and three RBI as the Red Sox blanked the Toronto Blue Jays 8-0 last night.

The only hits off Stanley, 16-10, were leadoff singles by Alfredo Griffin in the fourth, Rico Carty in the fifth and John Mayberry in the eighth. The Boston right-hander walked one and struck out three.

Boston picked up an unearned run in the second off Dave Stieb, 7-7, when Jim Rice reached base on an error by shortshop Griffin, then scored on a single and two fielder's choices.

The Red Sox made it 2-0 in the third when Rice's basesloaded sacrifice fly scored Rick Burleson.

In the fourth, Jim Dwyer scored from third on Mike O'Berry's groundout.

Then Hobson's two-run double, following walks to Fred Lynn and Carl Yastrzemski, gave the Red Sox a 5-0 advantage in the fifth. They added a run in the sixth, on Jack Brohamer's sacrifice fly, and two more in the ninth.

Boston Celtics fans are anxiously awaiting the pro debut of Larry Bird, the highest paid rookie in NBA history. (AP Laserphoto).

Steve Zack

Wait until next year

The Pirates and Expos are battling for National League East supremacy, the Astros and Reds are but a game apart, the Angels attempt to hold onto the A.L. West crown, the Orioles have run away and hid, and Curtis Rowe has been set adrift, while we Red Sox fans must endure yet another seasonal setback.

It is hindsight to reflect back on what has gone wrong this past season, a look to the future and 1980 would serve a much better purpose.

First thing to be changed on the Sox has to be the termination of present manager Don Zimmer's contract, best done by shoving it down Haywood Sullivan's throat. It was apparent by mid-season that Zimmer just didn't have what it takes to be a winning manager. When Sparky Anderson became available the Sox management should have jumped at the opportunity but as is often common with this club, doing the right thing doesn't always occur.

Next come the personnel changes. To me, it appears as though Carlton Fisk is in his last days as a Red Sox. His injury riddled body has all but put his catching days to an end and with Yastrzemski and Watson sharing DH and first base duties, Fisk becomes expendable.

In his stead, the Bosox will attempt to acquire, via the free agent market, California Angel backstop Brian Downing. If he is unattainable, Bristol catcher Dave Schmidt will probably inherit the job with Gary Allenson as his reserve. It is time to put Bob Montgomery out to pasture.

The starting infield positions will see no change but it is a safe assumption that Stan Papi and Ted "Tipsy" Sizemore will find employment elsewhere come 1980.

And of course, there are pitching changes to be made. Somewhere out in baseball land there must be a lefthanded starter willing to make his way to Boston. There are speculative reports that ringmaster Haywood Sullivan will attempt to get southpaw Bob Shirley from the San Diego Padres and there is also the possibility, with Zimmer's dismissal, that the Spaceman may once again use the Fenway Park pitching mound as his launching pad.

Also must come the realization that Mike Torrez is no more than a glorified .500 pitcher. Supporters of Torrez like to make note of the fact that if Torrez gets through the first inning he is untouchable the rest of a ball game. Fine, but when you're trailing 5-0 after one inning, you're not exactly looking good.

What must also be decided is whether or not Bob Stanley is a starter or a reliever. Keeping him wandering down both paths helps neither the team nor Stanley himself.

There must also be a revamping of the bullpen, an annual event. I am a firm believer that Bill Campbell can come back to his former level of effectiveness. People have given up on him too easily, but what must be taken into consideration is that the injury he has suffered to his pitching arm takes a good two seasons to heal and the comeback trail is long and slow.

Steve Renkos and Dick Drago's early season effectiveness faded all too quickly and rookie hopefuls Finch, Tudor, and Remmerswaal were washouts. The only bright side of the staff was the pitching of Tom Burgmeier, Allen Ripley, and Chuck Rainey, until injury deteriorated the latter.

1979 was, to say the least, a lost season. But as is often heard throughout the cold days of winter: Wait until next year.

Knapp blames others for the library fiasco

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

UMass President David C. Knapp said the university was not at fault for the mishandling of the library situation, but that "some form of state government was to blame," at a Faculty Senate meeting at this campus yesterday.

Citing "poor building construction" of the library and the subsequent "negative impact" that followed the closing of the 28-story structure, the president said the recent construction problems that have plagued UMass "did not help the morale of both the students and the faculty."

Knapp, who came to Amherst yesterday, is scheduled to meet in the Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti's office today to discuss construction problems at UMass.

The recent problems that have plagued UMass "did not help the morale of both the students and the faculty"

—Knapp

Funding, which provided for the transfer of books from the main library to Goodell also came under close scrutiny at the meeting. Questions were raised over the administration's use of an Acquisition Fund to pay for the cost of transfering library material.

Vice Chancellor of Budget and Finance George Beatty said "there is no excess money to pay the costs" but the money the administration used to pay the transferral costs "would not affect the Acquisition Fund.

In other faculty business, Government Association Co-Student President Brian Burke, called for the "faculty, administration and the students to work collectively to fight overcrowding in dormitories and classrooms." Burke also applauded the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy for their efforts in combating these problems.

Also, the Faculty Senate moved to acknowledge the University's librarians "for their valued service under extreme conditions."

In other business, the Senate elected Prof. Irving Rothberg of the Spanish and Portuguese Dept. and Prof. Arthur R. Quinton of the Physics Dept. as co-chair of the Rules Committee.

Fido no, Filo is frisbee champ

By KARIN HOLMES
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts State Frisbee Champ was at UMass yesterday, displaying some of the amazing freestyle that won him the title. Jumping as high as six feet in the air and moving with incredible speed. was Filo, the Frisbee Flying dog.

Filo, a four and a half year old Labrador Shepard, seemed at home while showing off on the fields across from Boyden Gym, because he had played there many times before. He lived at UMass from the time he was a pup until recently when his owner, Danny Filiault, graduated. "Filo learned to catch by catching tennis balls thrown off of a brick wall at the Brandywine Apartments," Danny explained. "He's been Frisbeeing for three and a half years."

Filo's reign as Massachusetts State Frisbee Champ (canine category) began on August 1, when he won in Braintree. After the competition Filo posed for photographers for the Boston Globe and Filiault says that, "with the extreme heat and Filo's exhaustion from his performance and the picture taking, he didn't do as well in the Regional Frisbee Competition as he should have." The regional competition was held on the same day as the state competition.

Had Filo won the regional contest, he and Filiault would have flown to California to compete in the national contest at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena. "Next year Filo will win," Filiault confidently confided.

Filiault said there are specific rules for canines. "Someone stands in a circle six feet in diameter and throws the Frisbee twelve yards. If the dog catches it with all four feet in the air he gets two points. If he has any feet on the ground he gets one point. They have two minutes to catch the Frisbee and bring it back and they get two tries," he said.

Filiault's plans for Filo go beyond just winning the National Championship. "I'd like to market Filo and make a poster with a catchy saying. Possibly like the beer commercial that says 'Go for all the gusto you can get.'

"I want to make him a star by getting publicity and drawing crowds. I'd like to provide Filo with a happy retirement," he said. Filiault said he wants to "find people who are also into Frisbeeing and their dogs to work out with and pracrice with."

As for Filo's private life, he keeps in shape by playing Frisbee keep-away with Filiault and his brother Mark, also a student at UMass, who says, "What Filo really needs is a female. He may be ugly but he's very versatile."

Amherst cable television is available for public use

By ROSALYN REISER
Collegian Staff

What do TV programs about kids' disco in the valley, the local housing crisis, some blacks' perspectives on living in this "liberal community," or growing old in Amherst, all have in common? CCATV, that's what--the Center for Community Access Television.

The programs' makers and subjects are all local amateurs--children, professors, students, homemakers, community organizers--not professional broadcasters.

Diverse aims and interests are given an equal voice on CCATV--Amherst's public access, non-profit cable TV station started in 1975 by local residents. Its purpose, said Director Irene Starr, is to "provide any individual or organization access to the medium of TV through low-cost video equipment, studio facilities and instruction."

At a recent open house for CCATV, the four-member crew who run the station gave a tour of the studio, demonstrated the video equipment, and told about the facilities.

Visitors were able to see themselves touring the studio as studio workers positioned video cameras on them, while back in the control room technician Henry Ordway demonstrated special effects on the mixer-monitor control panel.

Seeing the sophisticated but accessible equipment and viewing some past films that had been made with it made it clear to visitors that the center can accomodate many different interests.

"For people with an idea, we can facilitiate it," said A. Starr, a technician. "We'll produce it if it has any interest at all and meets FCC requirements for decency," she said.

"Our emphasis is on local issus," said Starr. "if a special interest group wanted to come down and have a panel in our studio, we could send it over the air live," she said. CCTVA "supports opportunities that broadcast Tv denies," says an informational pamphlet. Among them are:

A means for those denied control in the social system, such as Third World people, young and old, women and the poor to change those images that corporate broadcast TV creates.

Extensive coverage and discussion by anyone concerning local issues and events--a step towards a more democratic decision-making process.

Development of community members' confidence and skills in using the TV medium.

Emphasis on local news, information, people, happenings and special interest programming."

Public Access TV can also help viewers gain a critical perspective on the mass media and "how it works," said Starr. "TV is the same as news reporting--it's edited--it's someone's point of view."

The center offers workshops for both adults and children in use of video equipment, she said.

Silent politicians criticized

BOSTON (AP) — The state education commissioner agreed yesterday with a disgruntled high school headmaster who criticized city politicians for keeping quiet about a stoning incident.

"Jerome Winegar is right," said Commissioner Gregory Anrig. "The stoning of a school bus Tuesday should be condemned by officials at all levels."

Three black children were slightly injured when a group of white teen-agers disguised with ski masks attacked school buses with rocks and metal bolts in South Boston.

Winegar, who is headmaster of South Boston High School, said Wednesday: "The folks who are in charge of this city don't seem to care what happens here. Maybe they hope this school will fall into the ocean."

Aftershocks shake Italy

ROME (AP) — Hundreds of aftershocks rumbled up and down central Italy yesterday, echoes of a sharp quake that killed five persons and left more than 1,000 homeless as it shook the peninsula from Pisa's Leaning Tower to Naples' broad bay.

The Wednesday night earthquake leveled stone houses and medieval churches in the Umbrian hills north of Rome, rattled palaces and basilicas in the capital, and sent thousands of terrified Italians pouring into the streets. Panicky circus elephants smashed their way out of their pens in Perugia, near the center of the tremor.

U.S., Soviets to talk troops

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter told congressional leaders yesterday that U.S.-Soviet discussions on Soviet troops in Cuba are just now approaching the bargaining stage.

Holding an unannounced meeting with prominent senators and House members of both parties, Carter disclosed that previous discussions with Soviet officials focused on a search for information rather than on efforts to resolve the controversy.

An account of the president's early morning conference was provided by an authoritative administration official who asked not to be named.

This source said new discussions with the Russians will aim at substantive results that would "alter the situation" in Cuba.

Smith's women's center promotes feminism forum

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

Smith College Women's Resource Center women's facility has as its primary goal to promote feminism on the Smith College campus, according to Senior Coordinator Rosemary Kuropat.

The center is funded by the Smith Student Government Association and will receive $3,200 this year, a seven percent increase over last year, Kuropat said.

She said staff positions are volunteer and non-hierarchal, and responsibility is decentralized. The center is still recruiting volunteers for this year.

The organization is in the Davis Student Center, Prospect Street, Northampton and is open 2-5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Plans will be discussed at the next business meeting to extend the center's open hours. Business meetings are scheduled on Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m., and a casual tea is scheduled Fridays from 4-6 p.m.

Both meetings are open to all interested women.

Kuropat said it is virtually impossible to major in women's studies at Smith, although she said there is an interest in it. One of the center's commissions, the Women's Studies Task Group, administered a questionairre to a randomly selected group of Smith women last year, and 40 percent favored the establishment of some form of women's studies major at Smith. Kuropat said this year the task group will compile results of the questionairre and present a full report to the school's Curriculum Committee.

The center also has a lecture committee which has arranged for the visit of Gail Morrisson next week. Morrisson co-chairs New Hampshire NOW, a national women's organization.

The Entertainment Committee is sponsoring a free informal concert of women's music with Betsy Rose and Cathy Winter on September 30.

Popular feminist singer and songwriter Meg Christian will appear at Mt. Holyoke College October 5. This event is co-sponsored by the Mt. Holyoke Women's Center.

The Smith Women's Resource Center publishes a semi-weekly newsletter, entitled Forum, which lists feminist related campus and community events, and offers feminist opinions on both local and national events. Women can get on the Forum mailing list by attending a meeting or by calling the center.

The Publicity Committee, according to Kuropat, tries to reach the Five College area through posters and the Smith College Newspaper, the Sophine.

Kuropat said the best way for UMass women to find out about upcoming events is to call the center. She said the major goal for this year is to bridge the gap between Smith and the Northampton community, but UMass women are welcome to visit and share all of the center sponsored events.

The center has a Resource Library, Kuropat said, but offers no counseling services.

How-to's for H-bomb valuable only to a country

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — A published letter the government says contains H-bomb secrets may provide help to some nations wanting better bombs, but would be of no use to terrorists, several nuclear scientists said yesterday.

There has been concern for some time that terrorist groups or some small countries could acquire nuclear material, such as enriched uranium or plutonium, and construct crude atomic bombs.

The Office of Technology Assessment, a congressional advisory group, said in a 1977 report that a small group of people could design and build a crude nuclear explosive. However, it said, there was no real evidence anyone had tried.

"There would be absolutely no use terrorists could make of this information," said Dr. Robert G. Sachs, professor of physics at the University of Chicago. "The device described would be far too complex for anyone to build, except for a nation."

Sachs speculated that the information, if accurate, might prove useful to China, which already has the H-bomb.

"There is a big difference between detonating a boxcar-sized device and a smaller one that can be carried in flight as a weapon," Sachs said. "There is a possibility such information might give them a shortcut."

Hansen's letter has been printed, in whole or in part, by several newspapers following the much-publicized government effort to block magazine publication of related information.

Goodell library prepares to open Monday

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Goodell library is scheduled to open Monday, Sept. 24, at 8 a.m., according to a memorandum to the UMass community from Richard J. Talbot, director of libraries.

"A basic book collection has been started by selecting the 60,000 volumes which circulated four times or more since January 1, 1977," according to the bulletin.

Starting Monday the library will be open Monday through Thursday 8 a.m. to midnight; Friday 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; and Sunday 10 a.m. to midnight.

A paging system has been set up by the circulation department for Monday to allow library users to get books for immediate use from the main university library building.

This Saturday and Sunday the Goodell library will be open for reserve reading from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Students are asked to use the south entrance.

A survey by the Information Data Bank will determine the "number and nature of study spaces available on campus," the bulletin reads.

Meanwhile rooms 109, 110, 112, 114, 206, 209, 210, 212, 214, 216 Dickinson Hall are available from 6 p.m. to midnight Monday through Thursday; 6 to 10 p.m. Friday; 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday; and 10 a.m. to midnight Sunday.

Evening study space is also available in the Worcester and Hampden dining commons.

Check-cashing available in C.C.

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

A check-cashing window opened in the Campus Center yesterday morning, and students are now able to cash personal checks.

The opening ceremony, wich featured a ribbon cutting was held in front of the facility which is located across from the Campus Center Auditorium on the ground floor. The ribbon was cut by former Student Government Association Co-President Herb Tyson along with Vice Chancellor for Finance and Administration George Beatty, secretary Arlene Morrell, and Campus Center Business Manager Mohammed Idrees.

Campus Center Director Bill Harris said the window will be open for students to cash personal checks from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Fridays are being reserved for the cashing of payroll checks. There will be a 25 cent charge for each check cashed with a maximum of $50 for a personal check and $100 for a student paycheck, Harris said.

A check cashing facility to be located in the Campus Center was rejected by the Campus Center Board of Governors three years ago because the proposal involved a commercial bank, Harris said.

Solar greenhouses produce heat, vegetables in winter

By CHARLES RIOS
Collegian Staff

UMass solar experts say the use of solar greenhouses as an efficient means of producing winter crops and heating homes has become more feasible since the rising cost and increased scarcity of fuel has become a major concern. They say a solar greenhouse can provide supplementary heating as well as a variety of vegetables in the winter months.

Solar greenhouses have been largely developed over the past six or seven years said Sheldon Klapper, director of Solar Utilization Economic Development and Employment (SUEDE), a UMass solar energy demonstration project. He said "the principles have been around since the Aztecs."

According to Klapper, heat energy from the sun can be captured by water and stored until darkness when surrounding temperatures decline, the water releases the heat. "A solar greenhouse on the south side of a house will collect more heat from the sun in eight hours than it will lose in 24 hours, including the night," said Klapper.

Klapper said a greenhouse attached to the south wall of a house can provide 25 to 30 percent of the house's heating as well as enough vegetables to feed a family of four through the winter months.

"A lot of people don't realize the feasibility of such structures," said Kathleen Carroll, home horticulture coordinator of the UMass Extension Service. She said the cost of materials for a solar greenhouse ranges from $800 to $2,000 and pointed out that the long term investment would eventually reduce a family's heating bill and pay for itself with the vegetables produced.

Forty five solar greenhouses and solar heaters have been under construction for low income houses in the Franklin and Hampshire counties by project SUEDE. Funded by Comprehensive Training Act and the Extension Service, SUEDE is expected to complete the work in November.

These solar greenhouses will provide the families with extra heat in the winter and produce vegetables to be eaten by the families, said Klapper. The houses will also act as models which will help educate people in the communities to the uses of solar energy, according to an agency newsletter.

Broken water main, accidents keep police, town workers busy

A broken water main sent a flood cascading down College Street (Rt. 9) east of Amherst College Wednesday at 8 a.m., cutting off the water supply for residents on Dickinson Street, where the broken eight-inch pipe is located.

The public works department and police responded to the incident, shutting off the flow of water at the junction of College and Dickinson Streets. Houses on Dickinson Street between Spring Street and College Street were still without water at 4:30 p.m. as construction crews attempted to repair the break.

The cause of the break was still unknown when the public works office closed at 4:30 p.m.

Three vehicles were involved in a crash at the intersection of University Drive and Northampton Road at 11:15 Wednesday night.

A car, driven by Thomas Morrow, 24, of Bridge Street was traveling west on Northampton Road when it went through a red light and struck two vehicles driven by Earl Simson, 25, of 1240 Southeast Street and by Gary W. Gosh, 23, of Brandywine Apartments, police said.

Morrow was cited by the police for speeding and failure to stop at a red light. There were no injuries reported.

finished product doesn't necessarily bear any semblence to what went into it."

She said the "glossiness" of many TV shows, especially for children, has "deprived them of the ability to appreciate live programs. When children see a live play, it can't compete with Sesame Street's 'pizzaz' and constant motion."

Making the vast number of possibilities of Public Access TV a reality and building up community support is a difficult task, however, especially in a town like Amherst where over half the population is transient, she said.

Starr said CCATV lost almost all of its staff support when summer came. She also said that many who do get involved only want to rent equipment occasionally instead of participating in broadcasting, production or the policy-making end of the center.

"There are a myriad of things we need help with," said Starr. "We'd like people to help us select programs, write press releases, work on production crews, develop new ideas and apply for grants."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Food for thought

Last week there was a demonstration in Northampton to reopen the Seta Rampersad case. For people still confused on the issue, Seta was a Third World Woman, found dead in Motel 6, Sept. 13, located in South Deerfield. The information that has surrounded this case is unbelievable. Being a victim of this system, I could tell you by experience. I would make a request to the sisters and brothers walking around on campus (both day and night), please be careful.

Anyway, the past week has brought on some other repeated incidents. In Wednesday's Editorial page of the Collegian the old issue surrounding Blacks and Jews has surfaced again. The individual (David Biederman) felt that Brother Tony Crayton was irresponsible for his letter in December.

Commentaries

One problem with this response is the timing. Tony's article appeared ten months ago. Second, there have been few proposals submitted in reducing this problem. This leads me to believe, that those hurt by Tony's article, are probably barking because of the truth, and have no resolutions available.

Another repeater was the announcement in the Wednesday's Student Senate meeting to cut RSO organizations (except for a few) by 12 percent. Apparently, the Senate found themselves in a $330,000 deficit. It is unfortunate, that those RSO groups who had deficits for the 1978-79 academic year, will have to contribute to their own deficit and the new proposal. In remembering back to last year's scheme, we were cut by twenty-seven percent. Now is the time for students to get involved with the Senate.

One final note, on Wednesday night around 11:30 p.m., I notice the Shell station around the Steak Out was open. It seems funny, that six months ago, the same Shell station was open late, until the supposed gas crisis was introduced. I am not advocating that you not buy gas there, but it should make you wonder why things have returned to its original state based on higher prices.

FOCUS

Note—This is extended especially to the freshpersons.

I would like to utilize this space in reiterating the need of all Third World Women to be cautious as they travel the pathways in the town of Amherst (and surrounding areas). This area in particular has become notorious for its physical abuse of women. Within the past three years that I have been here there have been a number of incidents that have occured which remain unresolved ie. the Seta Rampersad case, the Jill Dickenson case, and the numerous other cases that have/have not been reported.

I know that there are times that you may say, "Well, I'm only going up to the hill, and I feel somewhat secure." This inevitably is not enough to ward off the ill mentality of a human whose intent is to do harm. This attitude can lead to unnecessary confrontations.

Last year there was the establishment of a male escort system amongst the brothers and sisters in the area. It proved to be quite effective in efforts of protecting ourselves. I realize that it is a necessity that we organize these types of communitives. It is important that when incidents such as the Crampton affair occurs, We Will Be Prepared! Brothers and sisters this is a call to struggle for unity—towards the establishment of power.

Neto's death

President Agostinho Neto died in a Moscow hospital at the age of 56, following surgery for cancer of the pancreas and cirrhosis of the liver.

The son of a Methodist minister, Neto had spent years in prison and exile. When Portugal granted independence to the 400-year-old colony in 1975, Neto's Popular Liberation Movement of Angola (M.P.L.A.), backed by Russia and Cuba, became involved with the rival guerrilla forces of Jonas Savimbi and Holden Roberto, both of whom had Western support. After gaining the upper hand with the aid of some 2,000 Cuban troops, Neto's presidency had problems because of economics, dissension within his party, and a continuing civil war.

Neto did not designate a successor before flying off to Moscow on September 6. Speculation about the country's new leader revolves mainly around figures within the M.P.L.A.: Jose Eduardo dos Santos, the pro-Soviet Minister of Planning and provisional head of government during Neto's absence; Lucio Lara, the provisional president of the M.P.L.A.; Defense Minister Iko Carreira; minister, whom Neto fired last year.

Neto had recently shown a growing independence from Moscow and some openness to West, backing deals with Gulf Oil and Texaco and seeking to establish diplomatic relations with Washington.

Towards knowledge cipher

TOWARD KNOWLEDGE CIPHER

Having habits that are seemingly unbreakable Establishing discipline within ones self to bring about order,

Coming from the mountain of hope into the valley of despair

Yea though I walk through the valley of death
I will fear no evil
For having a means of power in one hand, courage in the other,
having the willingness to do what's necessary
I will survive,

David said the beginning
I sayeth the end,

Rise fallen fighter, rise and take your stance again
CAUSE he who fights and runs away lives to fight another day,

Amen..., A Man,
"Swing low sweet chariot come forth and carry me home," Home,
Home sweet home

Home of our nativity
Land of our liberty
Land of our father's pride
Til the unalike came upon the tide
Now upon foreign soil
Here we've been made to toil
Wanting to be free, free at last
But not until that final blast...

Boston bus attack

"Three black children were slightly injured when a group of white teen-agers disguised with ski masks attacked school buses with rocks and metal bolts in South Boston," according to Associated Press. Jerome Winegar, headmaster of South Boston High School, was upset about it because the incident did not receive enough publicity and enough government officials did not condem the incident in public.

First black woman wins Rhodes scholar

by James Lewis

Karen Stevenson is the first black woman in the world to be awarded Rhodes Scholar. She recently won the international award and she is only the 32nd American to win it, the eighth black person to win it; which is especially good, considering the fact that women were not allowed to win the award until 1975. She was selected out of 1,250 applicants from every continent on the globe.

She is 22 years old and a recent graduate of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

The Rhodes Scholar is an honor given to the most outstanding university student academically and athletically in the English-speaking world.

According to the New York Times "She finds it ironic that the founder of the scholarship, Cecil John Rhodes, the man for whom Rhodesia is named, was one of the architects of white supremacy in southern Africa. Although he did not explicitly bar blacks from scholarship competition, he did bar women." This year is the third in which young women have won it.

Miss Stevenson will leave in early October for two years at Oxford University in England, where she will study French and Russian literature.

Miss Stevenson is accustomed to winning. She won a Morehead scholarship to the University of North Carolina the first year the scholarship was opened to women. The scholarship is awarded to high school students on the basis of character, scholastic ability and physical vigor in sports or in other activities.

At Chapel Hill she was elected Phi Beta Kappa and seved as captain of the women's varsity track team—holding the North Carolina state record in the women's 400-meter dash and the university record in the 60 and 100 meter hurdles. She also won the Irene E. Lee Award which is given to the outstanding senior woman.

She won the Jim Tatum Memorial Award in her junior year—something no other woman had ever done before—and she went on to win it again her senior year.

This past summer, she spent six weeks in June and July traveling through Russia, Turkey and Eastern Europe, studying ecclesiastical art and architecture. In former summers, she worked in marketing with E. I. duPont de Nemours & Company, held an internship with the Palo Alto, Calif., Police Department; studied at the Russian School in Middlebury, Vt. and participated in The Experiment in International Living in Okayama, Japan.

Miss Stevenson has been accepted at Yale Law School, where she plans to study after Oxford.

Miss Stevenson attended Washington's often criticized, inner-city public schools, where her mother, who holds a Ph.D. in special education, worked as a psychologist. She transferred to Taft, a preparatory school in Watertown, Conn., in 1971, the first year the school accepted women. Her mother was the dominant influence in making Karen what she is today. "I grew up learning to think well and write well, and we had library cards and were always in trouble with overdue books. Mother didn't compel academic achievement, but she rewarded it. No television was allowed during the week. If there were something we especially wanted to see was like a Jacques Cousteau film, we had to talk to her about it the Sunday before and plan for it we learned early to think ahead."

This article was compiled from an article written by Barbara Gamarekian, printed September 3, 1979 in The New York Times.

UMass senior is new local city councilor

By JOE GANNON
Collegian Staff

Northampton has a new city councilor and he is Tim O'Leary, 20, a senior accounting major at UMass.

"I'm the youngest city councilor in Northampton's history," said O'Leary, who was elected to a two-year term by a margin of 19 votes in Tuesday's election.

"It was a tough campaign," said O'Leary "I was running against people who were much older than me and I had to convince the voters that I could do the job despite my age."

O'Leary, who is also a commuter student senator and president of the Massachusetts State Student Association, said in order to reach the voters in his district he had pamphlets printed and said he personally distributed them to each household.

When asked if he had set any goals for his first term in office O'Leary said, "I am into alternative energy and I have already studied the possibilities of getting hydroelectric power from Mill River." O'Leary said initial capital expenditures for such a project could be gotten from a government grant.

O'Leary also said he is looking into a methane reclaimation project at Northampton's sewerage plant. "A solid waste burning plant would also be an alternative to the town dump which now buries the 9,000 pounds of trash produced daily in Northampton," he said.

An apology...

Steve Klein

In an editorial I wrote for the Collegian last week, there were certain ambiguities which I'd like to address.

Firstly, my sole intention in writing the editorial was a fear that the Black Affairs pages as they existed in the past were in danger of "fizzling out." It is obvious this didn't happen and for that I am grateful.

Secondly, there has been much apprehension within the Third World community to my saying, "...narrow-minded attitude held by many black and Third World students that to work alongside white students in the Collegian is not worth their time or energy."

I have been proven wrong and I apologize.

The most valuable thing that could evolve from these past few weeks is: Third World involvement throughout all the pages of the Collegian, and this is a sincere invitation for just that.

Steve Klein is acting Executive Editor of the Collegian.

Editorial/Opinion

Black-Jew rift very serious problem

James Lewis

There is definitely a rift between blacks and Jews and its not something new, but part of an on going struggle for power and human rights. In the thinking of black people, Jews have always occupied an interesting and special relationship. This relationship has two completely opposite faces, two opposite standards, two opposites functions. I'll explain.

In my experience, I've known Jews who have common goals and interest with myself, and others whose interest run counter to mine in every way. This is true with all people, but with Jews it's a little different. Being from Roxbury, the black ghetto of Boston, I found that most of the liquor stores in Roxbury were owned by Jews. In fact, a lot of the petty shops were owned by Jews. They seem to be involved with black Americans in many ways. The term 'ghetto' originated with the Jews in Europe, in old world history, and their reputation as financiers originated with the rise of the merchantile society.

Throughout history, Jews have been treated as outcast and have been alienated from society. Only through hard work and consistant effort have they been able to achieve progress in the society where they live. In America, they have been able to achieve tremendous progress due to tremendous work and effort on their part.

But they still seem to be involved with black Americans. Jews still own much of the property where black people live at in the ghetto. And when black people started attending colleges and joining labor unions in higher numbers, the rift widened;

Blacks and other Third World people have been making progress too in the past years in this country. The progress is minimal and they have not yet reached equality, to say the least. But in fields of business, economics, housing, law & politics, and education, blacks have been historically been systematically excluded by what is termed "institutional racism". In other words, it was illegal for black people to be allowed to have equal education, housing, employment or equal anything.

Black people started fighting this story on two fronts, on the streets and in court.

We have won legal victories against housing discrimination, segregation in education, and employment discrimination. And here again, they still seem to be involved with black Americans. Allen Bakke is Jewish and his attack again Affirmative Action was supported en masse by the Jewish people in this country. The attack against desegregation in public school is another field where Jews seemed involved with black Americans. Black Americans started going to college in large numbers when desegregation was instituted, and Jews turn out en masse against it and are still fighting it today. Look at South Africa and the Jewish economic involvement with that country. Israel's economy is, to a large extent, dependant on its investment in South Africa.

My own conscious anger with Jews came finding out about former ambassador Andrew Young's firing, I was watching the CBS evening News when they flashed an Israeli newspaper with the headline stating "FIRE ANDREW YOUNG". Up until that time I had been wondering about the power of the Jewish people in this country, their control over Congress, their backing by business, their numbers in law and medicine, in the media and why the United States, the greatest nation in the world, is so perplexed and crazed about doing everything in its power to protect the Jews. When I saw Andrew Young fired, I determined to know how/why this could happen.

If the Jews feel that the progress of black and Third World progress is a threat to their progress, then we have a serious struggle on our hands, because we will progress, no matter who is trying to stop us. We will be heard and we will gain equality and if it comes down to a race war then so be it. But we are an equal people and so long as Jews work against us, they expose themselves more, and are ruining their own credibility as a people.

Don't throw bottles and...

To the Editor:

I am writing this as a resident of Brittany Manor who is deeply concerned about the situation UMass students have been creating here on weekends.

At 12:30 a.m. last Saturday night a rock was thrown through my bedroom window with a force that shattered the window. Glass not only covered the bed under the window, where I had been only half an hour before, but was carried across the room. Had I been in there I doubt I could have escaped being seriously injured. Even worse, think of this--what if there had been a two-year-old child in that bed under the window? (There almost was.) Whoever threw that rock was not in a condition to know or care about such things. And this was not the only window-breaking incident that night.

So I am sending out this plea to UMass students who have been coming here and to those who are living here--please do not consider this place just another dormitory! It is a community of adults and children who are being harrassed and endangered by your actions.

There are young children living here who should not have to lie awake listening to yelling and screaming and foul language outside their windows at 3 a.m., never mind the adults who are trying to sleep at that hour. There are young children living here who should be able to play outside without the hazards of jagged broken glass strewn on the sidewalks and hidden in the grass.

I am asking that crowds of students stop coming here to drink and roam outside the buildings.

I am asking residents who have parties here to contain them in their apartments and have them be of a controllable size.

I am asking these same residents to clean up any cans and bottles and broken glass that do result from their parties.

I am asking, in short, that people be considerate and caring and take the responsibility to see that Brittany Manor is safe and reasonably peaceful on weekends for those who live here. Thank you.

Little Funding Hurts Library

To the Editor:

The closing of the UMass Library is just another example of the physical deterioration of the campus. Years of 'level funding' have resulted in many problems due to deferred maintenance of UMass buildings. This university is not the only state school suffering from lack of funding. Public higher education is under attack through-out the country, especially in Massachusetts, where there is a very powerful private school lobby.

How does this translate to our campus? Aside from the loss of jobs and material resources, the closing of the library leaves dorm residents without adequate study space. The conditions of the dorms already breed anti-social and anti-academic behavior due to lack of funding, inadequate and deteriorating facilities and fewer staff people.

'Choice of evils or no nukes

To the Editor:

The twenty-one of us who were arrested for a non-violent civil disobedience action at the Rowe Atomic plant on last June 2nd, will be coming to trial soon in Greenfield District Court. The pre-trial hearing is scheduled for 24 September '79 at 9 a.m. At this hearing we have motioned for a defense based on "choice of evils." This means proving that continued operation of Rowe Atomic, and subsequent low-level radiation, is a greater evil to the people of Western Massachusetts than our trespass at the plant.

We believe in the choice of evils defense because it is what our protest was (and is) all about. We were not blocking the entrance of the plant only to trespass, but to express our abhorrence of, and the frustration with, the continued operation of the Rowe Atomic plant. The accident of Three Mile Island in March has given us a sobering look at what might happen in Western Massachusetts. As citizens concerned about the safety of our own lives and the lives of our children, we will continue our struggle until the turbines at Rowe Atomic turn no more.

Alan Surprenant

'Jesting' letter 'not funny'

To the Editor:

I would like to express my feelings about an editorial by former SGA Co-President Jon Hensleigh and Tom Malone. I hope, Mr. Hensleigh, that you intended the piece in jest; if not, I feel sorry for you. I found nothing humorous about it.

Robert Cleary

Student writes 'tidbit' guide

By DEBORAH LESSER
Collegian Staff

Did you know Amherst was named after a well-known British general in the French and Indian War, Lord Jeffrey Amherst—that poet Emily Dickinson and Eugene Field, author of Wynken, Blynken, and Nod and Little Boy Blue, were long-time residents of Amherst—or that Amherst sports a rare group of imported Japanese trees?

These tidbits and others can be found in Trips and Trivia, a wealth of interesting and helpful information authored by UMass graduate Linda Fuller.

The book is a fascinating guide to points of interest, events, and the history of more than 100 cities and towns in Western Mass., including Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden, and Hampshire Counties.

Listen to what $189 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Roberts Philips TDC

It buys you a real component system, not a plastic "all-in-one" compact like the appliance stores offer at this price.

Our $189 system is perfect for dorm rooms and apartments. It features a Roberts RX 115 am/fm stereo receiver, with considerably more power than you'd expect (15 watts rms per channel, 8 ohms, 20-20kHz.).

The Roberts receiver drives a pair of TDC-1 loudspeakers. To complete this system, we include the Collaro automatic turntable by Philips, and a magnetic cartridge.

Listen to what $259 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Our $259 system features a Pioneer SX450 am/fm stereo receiver, with a sensitive FM section that can make distant stations sound local.

The loudspeakers in this system are Kenwood LSK-100's. Also included are a Collaro 1251 automatic turntable by Philips, and a magnetic cartridge.

KENWOOD
PIONEER Philips

Listen to what $299 can buy at Tech Hifi.

Our $299 system offers you the wide-range response of KLH classic Jr. loudspeakers, and the reliability of a Nikko NR315 stereo receiver.

The turntable in this system is the popular BSR 250S automatic, with an ADC magnetic cartridge.

Top music stars sing for the sun

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Jackson Browne, James Taylor and other well-known musicians, performed for a capacity crowd of 20,000 at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night, in order to raise funds for anti-nuclear and pro-solar organizations.

The five-hour concert is expected to raise $600,000 after expenses. All musicians donated their time as did lighting and sound technicians. The Garden charged the performers for only the office expenses. Musicians United for Safe Energy (MUSE) was created by John Hall in August 1978 after he realized that small, local anti-nuclear concerts were "not accomplishing enough."

The enthusiasm and sense of purpose was exhilerating. John Hall opened the five-hour concert with "Runaway With Me" and proceeded with various instrumentals and sax solos; and "Platonium", one of the many protest songs.

Bonnie Raitt joined Hall and belted out "Good Enough."

Raitt said "there is more happening than just raising money. Musicians will also help to reawaken a sense of activism."

As the concert continued each performer reiterated the danger of nuclear power and continually spoke of the feasibility of solar power.

Raitt's songs included "Angel", "Leave Home Boy", and she was joined by Jackson Browne, one of the MUSE Board of Directors, on the keyboard with "Under the Falling Sky".

The audience was given just a taste of Browne, before he introduced Graham Nash whose songs included "Wildtails", "Out on the Island", and "Our House", which was beautifully executed. His conclusion, "Chicago" was spiced with screams from the audience at the lyrics "We can change the world."

It was apparent all of the performers are good friends,and it was both entertaining and inspiring when they introduced one another and shared a song. Browne rejoined Nash in the song "Crow in the Cradle" and finally began his own set.

Browne is involved in the organization of the concerts and will be appearing at most of the other upcoming events, namely a no-nuke rally September 23 in New York's Battery Park, which is next to the World Trade Center.

Former Congresswoman Bella Abzug, activist Tom Hayden, and consumer activist Ralph Nadar will speak at the rally which features numerous musicians including Nash, Browne, and Holly Near.

Browne's energetic set included "Running on Empty", "Pretender", "Disco Apocolyse", and 'Hold On-Hold Out".

Brown said "we hope that people will become attuned to the problem and shoulder their share of the weight in deciding some of these things. The lives of future generations are in our hands."

Then Browne introduced his friend James Taylor and was off. Taylor interspersed melodic and harder rock tunes, choosing favorites from his various albums. His opening "Long Ago and Far Away" beautifully set the tone for the rest of the set. He continued with "Carolina In My Mind", "Your Smiling Face", "Don't Let Me Be Lonely Tonight", and—off of his new Flag album—"Up On The Roof." He concluded with a protest song "Get Up And Fight" and surprised the audience when he was joined by his wife, Carly Simon, for a rousing duet of "Mockingbird."

A film entitled "Save the People" was shown in order to demonstrate current solar projects.

If that were not enough for music lovers, the Doobie Brothers concluded the concert with various old favorites including "China Grove", "Sweet Feeling", and "Without Love". They were joined by Nicolette Larson who sang "Whole Lot OF Love". All of the evening's performers joined each other for a finale of "Taking It To the Streets".

" Fuller, 37, calls her book an "architectural, educational, historical, and recreational guide," and "a must for your coffee table."

Trips and Trivia was written as a "family venture, and its prime objective is to bring together the family in first-hand educational experiences of discovering facts about their heritage and opportunities in their locale," said Fuller.

It can also serve as a teaching aide in a variety of classroom situations and as a directory of recreational areas and activities, Fuller added.

Fuller, a Ph.D candidate in communication studies, said she got her idea for the book from her experience as a volunteer at the Gateway Alternative School in Springfield, where she coordinated day trips for students.

"It was a tremendous undertaking, thoroughly researched and almost like a bicentennial study of more than 100 cities and towns," Fuller said of the year-long project.

The more cumbersome step in preparing the book, Fuller said, was the reconfirmation process because each item had to be carefully documented and acredited.

Booters play to OT draw

By DAVE BRADLEY

The UMass men's soccer team opened it's season Wednesday with a disappointing 2-2 tie in overtime against Bridgeport University under the lights at Kennedy Stadium in Bridgeport. Sophomore forward Tony M. Dias scored both Minutemen goals.

UMass had the win. The all-knowing record-book keeper had dipped his pen into his ink bottle and was about to jot in the Minutemen's first victory. But with 1:40 left to play in overtime and UMass ahead 2-1, the defense lapsed, Bridgeport scored, and the first win of the year was postponed.

"We had it and we let it off the hook," said Coach Russ Kidd.

"They made us play the way they wanted us to play," added tri-captain Mark Vassalotti. "They weren't nearly as good a team as we were skillwise. It's a disappointment."

The game was not vintage college soccer. In fact Coach Kidd termed it "awful soccer" with just a few moments of brilliance mixed in.

Neither team waited long to notch their first points on the board. Bridgeport marked the scoreboard first with a goal at 3:09 in the first half. Bruce Brennan took a pass in front from Jim Costa and blitzed one past UMass goalie Mark Marilla. Marilla had little chance as the shot came from about 30 yards out and punched the upper right hand corner of the net.

Women spikers in tri-match

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN

The UMass women's volleyball team meet the University of New Hampshire and the University of Vermont this Saturday at 1:00 in the NOPE gym.

Coming off a fine performance in the URI Tournament last weekend, where they shared first place with Rhode Island, UMass has been preparing for a week for the weekend visitors and for a Tuesday night match against Boston College, also at NOPE.

"The team should do really well this Saturday," said assistant coach Al Morel, "Coach (Elaine) Marasco has had the team working hard on conditioning exercises for the past week; the women have been jumping (to exercise for blocking) and have been doing setting and digging exercises.

All this results in a good team; the best-conditioned team is the one that wins."

On the team in general, Morel said, "UMass has pretty high-caliber players. They'll do well this year."

Netmen triumph over URI, 5-4

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team, aided by some strong double's play, sneaked past a stubborn Rhode Island squad 5-4 yesterday afternoon at the sun-drenched Upper Boyden tennis courts.

For much of the day the outcome of the match was very much in doubt as both teams split the singles competition, 3-3. It was there in the doubles action that UMass went to work clinching the match. The Minuteman No. 1 doubles team of captain Dave Nowak and Sergio Strepman came back from a set down to climax the UMass victory, 4-6, 6-2, 6-2. Dan Gallagher and Neil Mac Kertish had given the Minutemen a 4-3 advantage when they defeated Mark Scotland and Dave Porter, 6-2, 7-6 (5-4).

In the singles action earlier in the afternoon No. 1 Mark Huetteman of UMass outsteadied Mark Scotland 7-5, 6-3. Both players had long rallies with Huetteman rushing the net forcing Scotland at times to hit long.

UMass' Sergio Strepman didn't fare so well dropping a 6-1, 7-5 decision to Tim Prete. Strepman never really found his rhythm on the courts.

Captain Dave Nowak played his usual steady game earning a 6-1, 6-4 victory over Steve Philips.

No. 4 Matt Modlish spotted URI's Mark Briggs a one set advantage but then settled down and breezed taking the next two 4-6, 6-1, 6-1.

URI's No. 5 Dan MacCormick coasted to a 6-3, 6-3 win over Gallagher.

Perhaps the most heartbreaking loss for UMass was Rich Sontag dropping a 6-3, 5-7, 6-4 loss to Mark Kitz. Sontag had led 4-2 in the final set but then faltered losing the last four games.

Head coach Steve Williams voiced his pleasure about the play of his doubles team: "They are playing real good doubles. The quality of play is quite advanced for this time of year. Huetteman and Nowak are playing good singles, also."

The Minutemen's next match is at UNH Sept. 26th.

★Kickers tie

UMass answered nine minutes later when sophomore Doug White sprung Diaz for a shot from 15 yards out Midfielder Scott Cooper started the play with a pass from center to White on the left. White spotted Dias breaking for the net and led him perfectly. Dias moved in and placed a low shot to the Bridgeport goalie's left, just before being tripped from behind by a Bridgeport defender.

In the second half, UMass' offense was quiet and the defense was forced to handle increasing pressure from the Bridgeport squad. Keeper Marilla was tested with six shots in the second half but rose to the occasion to keep the score tied at the end of regulation.

At 6:14 of the first 10-minute overtime period, Dias scored his second of what Kidd called "two pretty...textbook goals." Once again it was the duo of White and Dias who combined for the score. White lofted a pass from about 50 yards away from the left of goal to send Dias in alone. Dias went in and snuck a well-placed shot to the helpless goalie's right.

Smith edges netwomen; spoil season opener

By DAVE SIVRET
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team started their season off on a rather sour note by dropping their opening match to Smith College at Smith on Wednesday. The final score was 5-4 and it was a very close, well contested match.

After the doubles and the first three singles matches, the score was knotted at three all. At this point the situation looked to be very much in the favor of the Minutewomen. This year's team is strongest in the singles and it seemed very reasonable to expect that UMass would be able to take two out of three and that would have secured the victory. But on this day it was not to be as the Smith singles players prevailed to take the necessary two out of three and win the match.

"I don't think that we took this match as serious as we should have. They did have a good team but with our talent we shouldn't have lost. We really can't afford to lose matches with the amount of good teams that are around this year,' said coach John Beal.

Coach Beal cited the fact that the top singles player Barbara Mills had gone to the infirmary the day of the match with a bad cold and hadn't told him about it. This could have possibly caused him to take her out of the lineup or at least change the order in which the singles players were arranged.

On the brighter side, Coach Beal lauded the play of Joanne Vennochi (won 6-0, 6-3), Beth Goldberg (won first collegiate match 6-2; 6-4), and doubles team Carolyn Tarbell and Liz Case (won 6-1, 6-3). He especially praised the play of Sarah Fryberger who, in losing, played what Coach Beal called "one of the best matches ever played at UMass." She lost 6-2, 4-6, 7-6, the last set on a tie breaker, 5-4, in an extremely exciting match.

Next week could very well decide how this season is going to shape up for this team. They are playing Mt. Holyoke, Boston College, and Tufts. All three of these teams are among the top in New England and how the netwomen fare next week is very important as far as post season play is concerned.

"The women from Mt. Holyoke have won 28 straight matches and Tufts is always a fine team. If we come out of next week unscathed it will be a big plus for us," stated Beal.

The next match for the Minutewomen is this coming Monday away at Central Conn. They are looking on this as a sort of tune up for the big matches next week. The first home match is next Saturday against Boston College.

Gridders seek comeback against Black Bears

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass football team will try again for it's first victory of the season tomorrow, as it hosts the vastly improved Black Bears of the University of Maine in the home opener at 1:30 at friendly Alumni Stadium.

The Minutemen will be hungry for a win tomorrow after taking it on the chin last week at the hands of the Wildcats of Villanova. Villanova made good use of superior team speed and ran all over UMass for 486 yards worth of total offense and a 35-7 victory.

The opponent for this week, Maine, hasn't beaten UMass since 1965. Since that game, the Minutemen have outscored Main 352-35, including six straight shutouts, from 1970-75. When Maine scored a touchdown in the final quarter of last year's 40-6 UMass rout, it was the first TD they had scored on the Minutemen in nine years.

However, no one at UMass, from head coach Bob Pickett on down to the equipment manager, is going to take Maine lightly. "Maine is getting better and better every year," said Pickett. "They're much bigger than they used to be, and they have a lot of seniors in the starting lineup."

Like the Minutemen, the Black Bears will be looking for their first win tomorrow. In its first game of the year, Maine lost to little-known Division II school Towson State 13-7, and last week lost a tough one to BU, 24-13.

Maine coach Jack Bicknell has resturctured his offense, shaping it around a strong passing game. Junior quarterback John Torsky threw 44 passes in the first two games and completed half of them for 250 yards, with four interceptions. The receivers to watch for are sophomore Tom Torrisi, who caught six passes last week, tight end Roger Lapham, and senior receivers Rich Tullen and Pat Madden.

The Black Bears will be without the services of starting halfback Mike Edelstein, who injured his ankle against BU. Maine will have to rely more on senior fullback Steve McCue, who has carried the ball 12 times for 72 yards.

For the Minutemen, who will be gunning for the 11th straight Yankees Conference victory, all eyes will be on the defense, which had a long afternoon against Villanova.

Pickett said he will go with the same people on defense that he used last week. Said Pickett, "On defense, we are suspect in some areas, but we can match up physically with anyone. Our defensive players will improve from week to week," said Pickett. "We have faith in what we can do."

On offense, the Minutemen will again be led by senior quarterback Mike McEvilly, who was 14-22 with 125 yards last week, an effort good enough to earn him co-Yankee Conference offensive player of the week honors, along with BU quarterback Jim Jenson.

The Minutemen will try to avenge last week's opening loss as they take on the Black Bears of Maine tomorrow at 1:30 at Alumni Stadium. (Staff photo by Steve Thomas).

Changing of the guard

On September 21, 1978, Don Cherry, Chuck Fairbanks, Tom Sanders, and Don Zimmer were the men coaching the four big pro sports teams in Boston. Since then, Fairbanks and Cherry have departed for Mork from Ork country, and Sanders has returned to the obscurity from whence he came.

The only one left from that group is Don Zimmer, the Popeye clone who can't seem to please anyone. Right now, Zim's job looks about as secure as the bricks on the library.

What went wrong with Ol' Zip anyway? Some people say that he just cannot handle the modern athlete. Others say that he does not know what he's doing when it comes to maintaining a pitching staff. Still others say that don't really know whats wrong with the guy, they just know he doesn't have what it takes to lead a team to a pennant.

If this is so, why is Zimmer still around? Some say the Sox are waiting for spring to can him. Others (admittedly few) say he won't go because he is a good manager. Most people say he's still here because there isn't anyone out there who can do a better job than he can.

It is this last statement that I can only laugh at, because I know of several people who can step right in and lead the Sox to the World Series in 1980. The list is a very long one, and includes such notables as—

Ed King: In a recent interview, King said that he can definitely do for the Red Sox what he has done for the state of Massachusetts. Although not a brilliant baseball man, King says he has a plan to put the Sox back on top in '80. After taking over for Zim, King said he would pressure Bowie Kuhn to raise the legal pitching age to 40. This would pave the way for the comebacks of Juan Pizarro, John Wyatt, Lee Stange and Ray Culp, thus assuring the Sox of a pennant.

Benb: Benb could be just the man Haywood Sullivan and co. are looking for. He's got all the things that a manager needs in the perplexing world of modern-day baseball. He has X-Ray vision for quick detection of bone chips; he can read minds, thus enabling him to know if Alan Ripley's arm is sore without having to ask him; he can communicate with people who live in another dimension, like Bill Lee, Dennis Eckersley and Ted Sizemore. On top of all this, where else are you going to find a man with a fetish for sox.

Bruno Slepkawitzsky, second shift bartender at the Glowing Whale Tavern in Seabrook. A deft handler of pitchers and a fond lover of road trips to Milwaukee, Bruno could be our man. After watching Zimmer for years, Bruno concluded that the man was a good pilot but he didn't get thrown out of the game enough to be an excellent skipper. If awarded the position, Bruno says he can easily eclipse Earl Weaver's old records (542 arguments, 63 ejections, 14 suspensions and $3,000,000 in fines) and thus lead the Bosox to new heights.

Bob Bailey: A very intelligent baseball man (he invented the "take the first three pitches" strategy), Bailey will bring a wealth of experience to the position. If given the job, Bailey said his first act would be to use Don Zimmer as a pinch hitter and part time DH. "He's a valuable man and I want him on my team," said Bailey.

Mil Famee (Former big league relief pitcher and current proprieter of the beer drinkers Hall of Fame.) Famee has spent many years in the bullpen and knows alot about control, and how to lose it. In a press conference last week, Famee said he "had seen enough of failure to know how to avoid it." "Besides," said Famee, "I'm the only guy in the league who can outdrink Billy Martin and George Bamburger."

Thousands of no-nukers rally in Manhatten

By MARIA PALLAIS
Associated Press

NEW YORK —Thousands of anti-nuclear protesters gathered yesterday in Manhattan to hear big-name rock stars and activists such as Jane Fonda and Ralph Nader in what was billed as one of the largest such demonstrations in the nation's history.

Police were geared to handle a crowd of 100,000 at the sixhour rally sponsored by the September 23 Rally Committee of the Musicians United for Safe Energy.

The local chapter of the Mass PIRG organization sent four busloads of students from UMass and other area colleges to the rally. An eyewitness account and additional photographs will appear in tomorrow's Collegian.

Other speakers on the agenda included former Congresswoman Bella Abzug, and performers Pete Seeger, Graham Nash, Tom Paxton, Bonnie Raitt, and Jackson Browne.

The New York rally was one of as many as a dozen being held during the weekend from Washington State to Vermont. It was the major public event in a week of concerts, climaxed Sunday by major rock 'n' roll performers who donated their performances in an effort to raise money for political activity and opponents of nuclear power.

Demonstrators from three New England states converged on Vernon in southeastern Vermont to attempt to block the entrance of the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant. The story is on page two of the Collegian.

In Omaha, Neb., a protest sponsored by the Breadbasket Alliance, a group of 80 to 100 western Iowans and Nebraskans, was expected to be the largest of several in the state yesterday.

On the West Coast on Saturday, a cluster of balloons was released at an anti-nuclear rally in Bremerton, Wash., to show which way the wind would blow radiation if there were an accident at a proposed waste storage site at the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard. About 200 persons attended the rally sponsored by the Crabshell Alliance, a loose coalition of individuals and groups opposed to nuclear power.

Goodell opens today

By MARCIA MURPHEY
Collegian Staff

Goodell Library is scheduled to open at 8 a.m. today and library officials say it will contain the most frequently requested materials from the main library's collection.

Goodell is opening three weeks after the main University Library was shut down by school officials because its crumbling facade was determined to be dangerous to pedestrians below. UMass spokesman Art Clifford said Friday it is still uncertain how long the main library will remain closed but hired contractors have moved almost one quarter of the million volume collection out of the library and into Goodell through an underground tunnel cushioned with straw.

A paging system has also been set up by the Circulation Department to allow students to request material for immediate use from the main library.

This material will be added to the Goodell collection after its return.

"Suggestions for additional material are welcomed," said Director of Libraries Richard J. Talbot.

Several thousand current periodicals and newspapers will be avialable but a "basic journal collection" for the second floor will not be established until October, according to a memorandum from Talbot. But some periodicals are available on microfilm and others may be obtained through the paging system.

Goodell, located between South College and Bartlett Hall, has six floors and two mezzanine levels and library material is on the fifth and sixth floors and mezzanines.

The card catalog, reference area and information desk are on the fifth floor.

About 200 study seats, including desks, are available and a study area is located on the sixth floor.

The automated charge-out system will be used and several xerox machines have been set up, officials said.

Tours will be offered weekly on Wednesday at 2:30 p.m. and when staff members are available.

Sorority rush attracts 'all kinds'

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

I rushed a sorority. So did 100 women last week, but I was different. I was the only male.

The UMass Panhellenic Council sponsored the Sorority Rush which involved eight sorority houses on campus. Rush is a time when non-sorority members meet with sorority women to decide if they would like to join their house.

I found that I was treated as a reporter for the Collegian by some and as a friend by others. The sisters were curious why I was the only man present then wondered what my attitude toward the UMass sorority system would be, once I explained my assignment.

Orientation for rush began Monday in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union Building. Five members of each sorority staffed tables which the rushee went to for information on the different houses. The rushees were then assigned groups and counselors for the week's activities.

At 5:30 Tuesday evening, 100 women assembled at Haigas Mall in front of the Whitmore Administration Building to be taken on a 20 minute house tour of each sorority. No on particular stereotype of a woman was about to rush the UMass Greek System - some were wearing "disco" and others "preppie" cords and Levi's.

The house tours were simple. Each house was on display for the rushee to see and decide whether they felt comfortable with the sisters and environment, according to persons involved in planning rush. Some of the sororities were "psyched" to the point they were singing songs of welcome, while others laid low and greeted the rushees at the door. Each greeting was refreshing after experienceing the chaotic opening of the dormitories.

The next morning between 8 a.m. and noon, the rushees picked up that nights' itinerary at Berkshire House. Instead of eight house parties like the previous night, the rushee would attend only six. Erica Helfrich, sorority rush chairwoman, said, "by selecting six houses, the rushee is giving herself an idea of what type of house she

Grad student dies in crash

By CAROL ROSENBERG

UMass police said yesterday a graduate student was killed as a result of an accident Friday night at the intersection of Commonwealth Avenue and Campus Center Way.

Maria E. Sanchez, 22, a UMass psychology graduate student was pronounced dead Saturday at the Holyoke Hospital from a fractured skull, Sgt. Richard Grader yesterday said.

Sanchez, of Village Park Apartments and Miami, Fla. was travelling to a party for foreign students in the Campus Center at the time her car, in which she was a passenger, collided with a Ford Pickup truck.

The drivers in both cars were charged with vehicular homicide.

Driving Sanchez's 1974 Plymouth Duster was Boualem Lanseur, 23, a foreign student at UMass. He was treated for minor cuts and bruises at the University Health Services and charged by UMass police with failure to use care in turning and vehicular homicide, Grader said.

Driving the 1970 Ford Pickup truck, which was traveling North on Commonwealth Avenue, was UMass student Robert C. Purcell, Jr., 26, a continuing education student from North Village apartments. Purcell was charged with Vehicular Homicide and Speeding.

Both Purcell, and his wife, Mary E. Fandel, a passenger in the Ford Pickup, were treated at the UMass Infirmary for minor cuts and bruises, Grader said.

According to Grader, Purcell was traveling in excess of 30 m.p.h. in a 20 m.p.h. zone.

Funeral arrangements for Sanchez are incomplete. The Carballero Funeral Home in Miami, is in charge and the Messier Farrell Funeral Home in Holyoke is assisting.

Motorist shot to death

HAVERHILL (AP)— A Lawrence man has been identified as the motorist who was shot and killed by a man who claimed to be trying to recover his stolen pickup truck.

Trooper John Shumaker said officials identified the victim as Lucien Chretien, 26. Shumaker said he was shot Saturday by Donald L. Genzler, 25 of North Andover.

Genzler was arrested after he tried to stop the truck by shooting its tires, investigators said. Bullets fired from a rifle aimed at the rear tires apparent went above their target, piercing the truck's tail gate and cab and striking the Chretien.

Schumaker said Genzler was northbound in a van on Interstate 495 when he noticed his pick-up truck, which he had reported stolen two days earlier, heading the other way. §Schumaker said, Genzler then loaded a rifle and shot at the truck's front tires, hitting them. As the truck passed by him, he took another shot, this time trying to flatten the rear tires, but fired too high.

Soviet dissident starts tour

CAVENDISH, Vt. (AP)— Exiled Soviet dissident Alexander Ginzburg is embarking on a two-month, 50-college tour of the United States.

Ginzburg who has lived with Soviet author Alexander Solzhenitsyn in Cavendish since he arrived in America in May, said in an interview prior to his departure "where I live there is no American life."

Ginzburg said he will probably return to Vermont briefly after his tour, but he did not think he would make Vermont his permanent home.

Pols voices need pizazz

BOSTON (AP) —Massachusetts politicians may pride themselves on being dynamic, but a Boston voice therapist says for the most part their voices are just plain dull.

"Generally, most of them tend to be monotonic," says David B. McCloskey. "Their speaking voices are dull. They use no inflection."

McClosky, who served as vocal adviser to the late President John F. Kennedy during the 1960 campaign, has few kind words for local politicos.

Gov. Edward J. King talks "like a taxi driver," said the 76-year-old Boston native in an interview.

No-nukers arrested at Vermont Yankee

By WAYNE DAVIS
Associated Press

VERNON, Vt. —Police arrested chanting anti-nuclear demonstrators yesterday when they blocked the main gate of the Vermont Yankee atomic power plant.

The demonstrators walked voluntarily onto waiting rented buses being used by police as several hundred other protesters looked on, chanting and shouting their support.

The arrest process was slowed as individual photographs of each of the arrested demonstrators were taken by police.

Neither the charges nor the precise number of arrests was immediately available.

Members of the Vermont Yankee Decommissioning Alliance staged the blockade in an attempt to disrupt the plant's annual refueling.

The demonstrators, singing "We Shall Overcome," and chanting "No nukes," had shouted down police officials using bullhorns to warn of the arrests.

A brightly colored banner saying "Stop nuclear power now" was hung from the barbed wire atop the gate at the plant, located in the southeastern corner of Vermont.

Company officials earlier had warned that any demonstrators or observers who left a roped-in area away from the gate would be arrested.

Vermont State Police were placed in charge of security for the demonstration because Vernon has only two full-time police officers. They were under orders to arrest any demonstrator who violated the utility's property rights.

Study: 3 Mile cost millions

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — The Three Mile Island nuclear accident drove an estimated 144,000 persons from their homes and cost residents near the plant $18.2 million in evacuation expenses and lost wages, according to a survey conducted for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The study also found that nearly one in five persons living near the disabled reactor has considered moving elsewhere because they continue to fear nuclear accidents and radioactive emissions.

The independent survey concluded that the nation's worst accident had profound and adverse economic and social consequences for most people residing within 40 miles of the plant.

The survey, the first detailed socio-economic study of the March 28 accident at the complex near Harrisburg, was conducted for the NRC by Mountain West Research Inc.

Karl Abraham, a spokesman for the NRC's regional office in King of Prussia, said in a telephone interview that he was unfamiliar with the contents of the survey and that he was unsure whether the NRC had seen the report.

The survey was conducted by telephone between July 23 and August 6, and involved 4,585 persons living in some 1,500 households.

Although some residents went as far as California and Oklahoma, the average evacuation was 100 miles, and the average stay was five days, according to the survey. Many residents did not leave because they feared losing their jobs.

Nuclear question highlights primary

By SUE BASS
Associated Press

Three opponents of nuclear power may turn the election of Taunton Light Commission members into a referendum on the Seabrook, N.H., nuclear power plant, highlighting Tuesday's muncipal elections in six Massachusetts cities.

In other preliminary elections Tuesday, voters will begin the selection process for mayor in Boston, Chelsea and Revere and will nominate candidates for other municipal offices in those cities, Newton and Newburyport.

The Taunton Municipal Light Plant owns shares in three proposed nuclear plants and may buy a small piece of Seabrook. The three nuclear opponents are among eight people running for the three-member commission.

Also at issue is a $19 million generating unit that exploded four years ago while it was being tested. No one was injured, but litigation is underway to recover damages.

In Boston, Mayor Kevin H. White is seeking a fourth fouryear term against five opponents: state Sen. Joseph F. Timilty, his 1975 opponent; state Rep. Melvin H. King; School Committee President David Finnegan; Laurence Sherman of the U.S. Labor Party, and Luis Castro of the Socialist Workers Party.

The four major candidates are all Democrats, but the Boston vote, like Tuesday's other municipal elections, is a nonpartisan preliminary rather than a party primary.

Finalists chosen Tuesday will face each other Nov. 6.

A field of 23 candidates for the nine-member Boston City Council will be whittled down to 18, and three of the 13 candidates for the five-member school committee will be eliminated Tuesday.

Among the candidates for the Boston School Committee is former member Paul Ellison, who was convicted in 1976 of stealing public funds by depositing paychecks of two aides in his own account.

In Revere, George V. Colella is seeking his second consecutive two-year term as mayor against three opponents: retired Fire Chief Anthony D. Mastronardi, City Councilor William J. Foley and telephone company executive Guy G. Meli.

NORML tries to change laws

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

"It is inconcievable that the age of Aquarius would not bring about the legalization of marijuana," said Richard Evans, co director of the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

The group, dedicated to the eventual legalization of marijuana, will be holding meetings on campus soon to recruit new members and plan strategies and activities for this year.

The UMass chapter of NORML is not part of the national organiztion because of a regulation which requires Recognized Student Organization groups to be independent. But UMass NORML does work in conjunction with state and national leaders and maintains similar goals, said Scott Elliot, a UMass graduate student who serves as an informal liason between the state and UMass groups.

Elliot said NORML's function at UMass includes educating the public about marijuana, providing a vehicle for student lobbying on the issue, and informing students about the laws and what can be done to change them.

The UMass organization was started last semester, said Elliot, and was a "grass roots" organization involving about a dozen students. However, he said this year the group plans to actively recruit members at UMass.

NORML's contention, said Evans, is not that marijuana use be encouraged, but that people have the right to choose for themselves whether to smoke the substance.

Evans said he felt the laws against marijuana were more harmful than the use of the drug itself and described the laws as a "wedge that drives families apart." He said the drug laws should not be given any respect, saying "you can't change nature with brute force."

NORML is currently involved in a federal court suit in Washington to have the laws against marajuana declared unconstitutional as a violation of freedom of expression, said Evans. He believes the suit will eventually be heard by the United States Supreme Court. Also, Evans said, last year NORML filed suit in Washington seeking an injunction to stop the U.S. government's spraying of paraquat on marajuana crops. The courts eventually granted the injunction and an agreement was worked out with the government to cease future spraying.

Evans pointed to the tax advantages as a major reason for the legalization of marijuana. He said that $13 million is spent each year for the arrest and prosecution of pot smokers and estimated the law enforcement savings added to the portential tax revenue from the sale of marijuana could, in Massachusetts alone, net the state over $500 million.

He said Gov. Edward King should get behind the legalization efforts because of the reduction of crime, additional tax revenue, and the limitation of government intrusion into personal lives. He said King believes in these concepts but added that NORML expects little reform in Massachusetts while King is in office.

Massachusetts NORML is concentrating its efforts on Senate bill 1825 which would permit marijuana to be prescribed for medical use for cancer and glaucoma patients, said Evans. According to him, 14 other states have enacted medical use bills and that in Massachusetts NORML is lobbying and sponsoring letter writing campaigns in support of the legislation.

Evans also said he is currently working on a draft of a bill which would implement a legalization plan for Massachusetts. Although the introduction of the bill is still far off, Evans siad he hopes it will stimulate public debate on the issue. He said although he felt legalization is inevitable ther is still a large proportion of the population opposed to marijuana use. He described this group as the "last generation of white middle-class Americans not personally familiar with marijuana" and added that as the younger generations assume power the laws will change.

Evans expressed concern that groups such as the Hampshire Informed Parents Against Marijuana Incorporated are only adding to the anti-marijuana hysteria. (see related story this page.) He said that HIPAMI is concerned with markjuana abuse among children and while this does not conflict with NORML's ideas, their tactics do. He said the group wants to scare kids and this only adds to the lack of faith in the laws and educational programs.

"HIPAMI is indifferent to the social and legal issue," Evans said. "HIPAMI does not seem willing to entertain opposing viewpoints."

At a recent HIPAMI meeting, Evans said, a NORML supporter was not allowed to speak, and thes tactics, he felt, will be fatal to HIPAMI's efforts.

Elliot said he hopes more students will become involved with NORML, and he warned there is a tendency for many students to take it for granted the drug use laws will change. He said the need for student involvement is crucial to the movement and said nothing will be changed without student support. "Many students feel marijuana use is accepted here at UMass," he said, "but there are arrests made on campus."

Just two weeks ago at a meeting of the Hampshire Informed Parents Against Marijuana Incorporated held in Amherst the director of narcotics control at UMass stated he wanted law enforcement efforts against marijuana stepped up.

HIPAMI tries to inform kids

By PETER SMERDON
Collegian Staff

Hampshire Informed Parents Against Marijuana, Inc. (HIPAMI) recently held a public informational meeting at Amherst Junior High School attended by 135 people, and expects to have a full schedule of public meetings, committee meetings, and various programs for the rest of this fall.

HIPAMI was formed in July by three concerned parents and an attorney in Amherst to "combat the use of marijuana by young people who have not yet reached the age of majority."

As a part of their campaign, HIPAMI is running a free continuing education program called "Take the Mystery out of Marijuana" in Amherst, which starts on September 25.

The program will purposely not deal with the "legal aspects of adult use of marijuana," but seeks to produce "informed, concerned parents as the only solution to the national epidemic of adolescent drug use."

HIPAMI was incorporated for tax reasons and claims to be a non-profit, public interest corporation which focuses on marijuana because "it is most often the first illicit drug experienced by our children and its effects are widely misunderstood."

In a recent interview, attorney Thomas M. Carhart III, a director of HIPAMI and former marijuana user, said, "We are not opposing NORML (National Organization to Reform Marijuana Laws); we are not concerned with whether marijuana should be legalized. I do not want to see witch-hunts for marijuana users, but am deeply concerned about the easy access of children to grass."

HIPAMI believes in several recent scientific inquiries into marijuana use, which claim the drug can cause a variety of health-damaging physiological changes and immediate personality changes among adolescent users.

HIPAMI has planned a two-prong attack on child marijuana use--the first by "organizing and informing the whole community," including both parents and those in positions of authority; and the second by letting the kids help themselves by organizing groups on the lines of Alcoholics Anonymous to provide peer support and information for young marijuana users.

HIPAMI says it provides a "community resource" of carefully selected recent reports on marijuana. Carhart said, "if new information is given to the kids, eventually they will realize that it is in their own interest ti leave the drug alone."

HIPAMI was formed after a group in Northside High School in Atlanta, Georgia, where they claim the school atmosphere had "miraculously turned around and the peer pressure reversed against drug-use in one year."

A recent survey by the Daily Hampshire Gazette found that most students at school in Amherst estimated around 50 per cent of their peers frequently use marijuana before or during school hours.

Carhart says there is a drug-problem with children because "we're a very socially immature country. We tend to immediacy, we have no depth, so we have situational ehtics to a frightening degree."

To students at UMass, Carhart said, "Inform yourselves with the most reliable information. If you are doing drugs, and are concerned - find out! At least hear the other side of the argument from us."

He also said that HIPAMI welcomes student volunteers, or even student marijuana users, who might wish to join a group of kids who meet every week at his office to resist the pressure from peers to smoke.

Carhart said that HIPAMI was concerned that marijuana was increasingly pushed to school-children, who represented a relatively unsaturated market for the economic forces behind drugs - "smoking grass is the game now for kids", he said.

A reporter from the Daily Hampshire Gazette recently interviewed a 17-year-old marijuana smoker at Amherst regional High School who said, "UMass is incredible. If you know a high-school student who knows a dealer at UMass, you can get pot whenever you want it."

HIPAMI is a local, small-scale group which wishes to remain centered in Amherst, said Carolyn Quarles, the president of HIPAMI.

Quarles said there is hardly a family in Amherst unaffected by marijuana, and claimed HIPAMI is not "a bigoted self-interest group, but well-educated intelligent people who are personally concenned with drug-use by children."

"I don't believe we're zealots", said Carhart, "We're trying to do this rationally. We are trying to put a little intelligent appraisal into it. Nothing in life is completely free, including getting stoned on marijuana."

Adrienne Rich speaks of women—past, present

By SHERI SIMONTON
Collegian Staff

Feminist poet and author Adrienne Rich gave a poetry reading before a full house at Amherst College Thursday night. The pews of Johnson Chapel were filled with many men as well as women.

Listening to Rich reading her work is a very powerful and moving experience. Her voice generates a sense of energy and dynamism which brings to life the vivid sensual imagery of her poetry.

Throughout the reading the chapel was filled with an intense silence as we, the listeners, sat lost in contemplation following the poet's words. Rich vicariously takes us, through her poems, into the lives of women past and present. Her ability to animate her subjects makes it seem as though we were being addressed by the speakers of the poems themselves, rather than by Rich.

In "Mourning Picture" we see through the eyes of Effie, a dead girl. In "Phantasia for Elvira Shatayev" we hear Elvira Shatayev, leader of a Soviet women's climbing team, telling of their death on Lenin Peak during a snow storm in 1974.

Rich's poetry also takes us back to the early days of the women's suffrage movement and the world of Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and Jane Addams in "Culture and Anarchy."

Rich's melange of characters present a graphic view of the realm of women - their needs, pain, lives, injustices, and triumphs. Her poetry examines the world through womens' eyes - questioning many of our cultural beliefs and institutions.

Throughout her poetry Rich emphasizes the need for women to unite and find strength in each other to achieve their goals. Her work explores love and relationships between and among women - because, in the words of Adrienne Rich, "until we find each other, we are alone."

WSYL rocks campus-wide

By RICH NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Although the station has been in existence for five years, most people on-campus have never heard of WSYL-FM (97.7). The Sylvan Residential Area-based radio station hopes to change that image now that their antenna has been relocated from the side of Cashin House, in Sylvan, to the roof. This relocation now enables campus-wide reception of the non-commercial, progressive rock station.

Station Manager Marc Steenbarger said WSYL hopes to fill a void between the "alternative music stations and the over-hyped FM rock stations on the dial.

"We just want to expose people to good music, to be a rock station for students," he said.

WSYL's programming, primarily rock-oriented, also includes a Monday night folk show, a Wednesday night blues-rock show, and a jazz show, which is also on Wednesday evenings.

The station is run by Steenbarger, chief engineer Andy Fransman, and 42 full-time DJ's. In accordance with their primary interest in serving Sylvan residents, the DJ's must live in the Sylvan area. Steenburger said no license is needed to go on the air because the station's output is below the FCC's power limit. The only other qualification needed to be a DJ is, as Steenbarger puts it, "motivation and a willingness to devote time."

Operating on a $1,000 budget, provided by the Sylvan area government, WSYL has renovated their studio and hopes to install a new transmitter in the near future in order to "clean-up our signal," Steenbarger said, which is broadcast 18 hours a day, from 7 a.m. to 1 a.m.

WSYL's objective is to provide music and public service announcements to both Sylvan area and other campus residents. Third World, news and other programming broadcast by WMUA which has a larger staff, budget, and facilities are not carried on WSYL because of budget constraints. Steenbarger said, "Why should we try to mimick WMUA when they do what they do better?

JA tower to compute

By RICK BIBEAULT
Collegian Staff

Some John Adams Tower residents seem to have the problem of the library somewhat solved. A co-op of 14 students have helped rent a computer terminal for the tower, which will be linked to the University's computer.

Paul Rannenberg, the tower co-ordinator, said a CRT (which is a TV screen on which information is printed) and a DEC Writer (which prints out information on paper) are being rented. The rental fee for the CRT is approximately $45.00 and around $73.00 for the DEC. Each of the 14 students will be charged $34.00 per semester to cover the costs.

The closing this semester of the main library, which has cut off access to its computer teminals, prompted the computer rental. Rannenberg said the library is now planning to move the terminals for access of students. He also said there are too many students and too few computers and that the J. A. residents do not mind spending the extra money.

Rannenberg said he was informed by the University that the units will be installed in about two weeks. He said after the phones are installed by the phone company the units will be in operating order. Rannenberg anticipates this to be the beginning of a larger program with a tower capacity for 28 students and four units. Rannenberg said that dormitory co-head of residence Brian Cummings was partly responsible for getting the terminals installed.

Disorderly person, larceny keep police busy

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

UMass police Friday night arrested Scott A. Campbell on charges of being a disorderly person in Crampton dormitory. Further charges of Assault and Battery on two individuals are also expected to be leveled against Campbell, Grader said.

Campbell, a non-student with no address, was being held in Amherst jail on $500 bail last night, Grader said.

Police also received a report of larceny of pizza from a Whole Wheat Pizza delivery person outside of Crabtree dormitory. The pizza and delivery puch, valued at $25, were stolen from the delivery person's car, Grader said.

In a minor two-car accident this weekend, Joseph C. Landa, 17, of Chicopee was chargerd with speeding and driving with defective equipment after he collided with the car of a Springfield College studuent on campus

UMass police also reported 12 men were taken into Protective Custody this weekend - a non-arrest violation - and detained in Amherst Jail for up to 12 hours.

Police officers responded to a medical emergency Saturday after a Pierpont resident fell from a third floor balcony, a distance of 40 feet.

Judith A. Hunt, 18 of 435 Pierpont dormitory was treated for back injuries, Grader said, at the Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and transported to the UMass Infirmary.

Grader said it is "unknown what caused the fall," but said nobody pushed Hunt.

Police also reported two separate incidents of tire slashing on campus. Two tires of a 1972 Chevrolet Sedan were reported slashed on Friday at 10 p.m. in parking lot 63. Also reported were the slashing of two tires in the Physical Plant parking lot at 1:30 a.m. on Saturday morning. The same person is suspected in both incidents, Grader said.

All books available through page system

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The books are back.

Although browsing may become as outdated as Dewey Decimal, a new paging system for UMass library books begins this morning which should give students full access to University volumes.

The books will be retrieved from the main University Library to Goodell Hall, the temporary library site, upon request by students who cannot find necessary materials among the 60,000 volumes moved to Goodell two weeks ago, loan librarian Betty Brace said last weekend.

Brace said all books in the stranded 28-story library will be available to students through a paging system in the main entrance of Goodell. Both part and full-time staff will act as "gophers" for the books needed from the main library and will use the South College tunnel for access to the stacks.

"It could go like clockwork or it could be overwhelming," she said of the paging system, in which students will fill out request forms. Staff members will arrange requests by their call numbers for efficient retrieval, and then begin their search through the stacks.

The librarian estimated a minimum of one and a half hours from the time a request is made until the book is located and checked out to the borrower.

"It all depends on the elevator timing and the spread of requests we get," she said.

Brace suggested students placing requests give library staffers more than one title and call number for the subject they are studying, since sometimes the exact title may not be located in the stacks.

"People won't be browsing like they used to and we won't be able to look for them," the librarian said. She also said students should use the card catalogues at Goodell to verify call numbers and give several selections.

Requests will be batched together by floor every half hour and then retrieved, Brace said, to speed up the paging system.

This week the paging system willoperate only between 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. although Brace said the hours may be extended once the procedure is settled into a daily routine.

"I also fully expect that most of the books will be found right here in the open stacks of Goodell," Brace said, noting that the 60,000 most frequently requested volumes have been placed in the temporary location.

Study space in Goodell is currently limited to 50 seats in the periodical section and 150 seats in the reserve reading room. As soon as the remaining book cartons are removed from the former library, individual study carrols will also be moved into Goodell, Brace said.

In the meantime, students requiring additional study space in the evening can use Dickinson Hall, located next to Goodell, from 6 p.m. to midnight Monday through Thursday; 6 to 10 p.m. Friday; 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday; and 10 a.m. to midnight Sunday.

Rooms 109, 110, 112, 114, 206, 209, 210, 212, 214, 216 in Dickinson will be open. In addition, Worcester and Hamdpen dining commons are also open for evening study space.

UMass students interested in alternatives to the closed University Library can study at Hampshire College library with philosophy major Caroline Weening, above, or check out the shelves of waiting books in the temporary Goodell Library which opens on campus today, left. The holocaust and technology

Too often we hear the phrase "history is repeating itself." The connotation of this phrase is that human society has not learned from its past mistakes and is bound to repeat them.

One historic lesson which human society cannot afford to froget, never mind repeat, is the systematic destruction of six million Jews by the Nazis during World War II.

The Holocaust, as it is popularly known, has been, and is, perceived by non-Jewish society as being a specifically "Jewish" problem and as such doesn't deserve the attention of the non-Jewish world. In other words it doesn't affect the non-Jews directly, so why bother?

Yitzchak Santis

The illogic of this way of thinking is that it was the non-Jewish world which perpetrated the crime or idly stood by and did nothing. It is as the victim of a violent crime in a big city: the crowd witnessing the crime is frozen into inaction and vows not to "get involved." The poor victim is either hurt or killed, the assailent escapes easily and the uninvolved crowd, perhaps a little ruffled by the episode, returns to its daily routine never thinking that any one of them could be the next hapless victim. Or, more importantly, if they had helped the victim, he or she would be alive now.

Such was the case in the 1930's and 40's. The world was the passive crowd, the Nazis the assailant and the Jews the victim. For while Jewish organizations petitioned the U.S. government to bomb the camps, bomb the rail lines or just do something, Uncle Sam, in his infinite wisdom, didn't want to "waste" any airplanes for such a purpose.

While Jewish "boat people" drifted on the high seas seeking refuge, every country couldn't or wouldn't find some room for these people.

The refugee ship Struma stands out amongst them all: torpedoed in the Black Sea, 2,000 refugees drowned. Nobody wanted to get involved and the victim (European Jewry) is all but extinct.

Before the airing of the television production Holocaust, an astounding amount of people knew almost nothing of what happened to European Jewry. And a significant minority of people, especially the younger generation didn't know that Hitler was a Nazi! Or that Nazism is equal to race hatred and violence.!

Modern technology made it possible for the Germans to carry out their indescribably horrible scheme. Industrial engineers were called in to compute and devise the quickest, most efficient methods to kill, en masse, human beings. Oligarchic private industry came up with a wonder gas called Zyklon "B" and profited by the billions from the sale of this gas to the Nazi regime. Rail transport worked round the clock to bring cargoes of human beings to the death centres. These cargoes were men, women, girls and boys. People: just like your or me, or my or your friends or my or your mother, father, brother, sister, lover...

Today modern technology is working round the clock producing more powerful, more radioactive, more efficient and more accurate nuclear missiles. The nuclear arms race is technology run wild. It is oligarchic private industry profiting by the billions of dollars each year by producing the instruments of human self-extinction.

Global human society, the average 'Joes and Janes' (that is, you and me) goes about its daily routine not wanting to "get involved." Nuclear Holocaust is too abstract; mass destruction of human beings is seemingly too incredible to be possible.

The Black philosopher James Baldwyn said, "If people learned from history, history would be different." How true!

Yet, if any lesson is to be learned from history, it must be the lesson of the Jewish Holocaust.

For the sake of us all, we had better study hard.

Now, before it is too late.

In response to rift story

To the Editor:

I take it from Mr. Lewis' editorial on the black-Jewish rift (Collegian, Sept. 21) that the Jew's "credibility as a people" is in danger due to the following:

1. Andrew Young, a representative of the United States government, decided that he could act strictly according to his own will and whim in international diplomatic relations without consulting the President. No government could possibly survive without a heirarchy of authority. If government officials all made their own decisions the whole structure would collapse. The President did what any leader would do under the circumstances.

2. Israel, itself subject to the pressures of economic boycott and burdens of defense spending, trades with South Africa. So do the Arab States, much of black Africa and most of the rest of the world.

3. Jews feel they should be able to gain admission to universities and professional schools on academic merit alone, and not on a racial quota-system.

4. Jews own some property and small businesses in black neighborhoods. If Mr. Lewis thinks that private ownership is unethical, perhaps he should be editorializing for socialism instead of leveling an attack at Jewish people.

Mr. Lewis also rehashed the old fantasy that Jews somehow control this country. It is a myth that has been promoted on numerous occasions throughout history by those who saw a road to power by whipping their people into a frenzy of hatred against a convenient scapegoat.

His reference to a race war is very much in keeping with this tradition.

Veterans: Right to speak?

To the Editor:

I was quite irritated to read of the Veteran's plans to stop, by court order, Jane Fonda from speaking here. Certainly, the Veterans have the right to express their beliefs. However, they insist on ignoring Ms. Fonda's own right to "stand up" for her beliefs.

As for her appearance being a "direct insult to the patriotism, bravery, and courage" of every Veteran, this is possible. There are people who are insulted by the silliest of things. One might consider the Veterans, by their actions, to be insulting Ms. Fonda's "patriotism, bravery, and courage," which has come out in her stance against a war she felt was wrong. As for the Veterans who were wounded, let Mr. Collins not forget that there have been pacifists killed, wounded, maimed, jailed, and abused otherwise for their own version of patriotism.

Collins' final comment seems to be a veiled threat of some sort. Whether he suggests violence or pacifistic protest, he should remember one thing: he is doing exactly what Ms. Fonda has done.

He is protesting something he felt was wrong.

No library jokes, please

Chuck Edgerly

Look, I've had it with library jokes. They bore me. Remember how sick we all got of Watergate jokes? Witty puns about school food? Knock-knock jokes about Three Mile Island? They're just no good anymcre, after hearing 8000 variations on a theme.

I cringe after the obligatory first allusion to the library in class (one remark is permissible, but after that the professor becomes redundant and stale.)

I become nauseous when two people part and one says "watch out for falling bricks!"

When someone says "Maybe the library will fall on top of me and my problems will be solved," I sincerely wish for it to happen. Library jokes make me go crazy, beserk, bonkers, nuts...

Now don't think I'm going to simply go insane and babble about religion from the top of the Fine Arts Center. When my survival or mental health is threatened I usually react. (I haven't perished yet and I'm almost 21 years old.) I have a proposal. It was proferred to me the other day by a friend of a friend; a dude who studies nuts and bolts and lives in a tower not unlike the library itself. He said "I always wanted to get plastic explosives and blow the thing straight down." Beautiful! Marvelous!

The powers that be should heed this very practical advice.

Just think, we could draw millions of people, people from all over the world--geniuses, hermits looking for salvation, true radicals, fiscal conservatives, bored housewives (the list is...)

We, the University of Massachusetts community, could be the host of the biggest and best cultural event since Woodstock. Reporters from such diverse media as the New York Times, Rolling Stone, The National Star, and PBS would come and write glorious cultural exposes.

Bands would come to play. There would be fireworks, politicians would make capital out of it and fund huge parades and easts (this could save Jimmy Carter), and then, at high noon, the library would fall. For once, the actual event would not be anti-climactic (remember all those lopsided Super Bowl games) but loud, colorful, and tremendously FESTIVE.

We need more pure festivity.

New wave Clash plays to near capacity

The Clash features from left Mick Jones, Paul Simonon, Joe Strummer and Nicky "Topper" Headon.

By PERRY ADLER and JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

The new wave band The Clash rocked out a near-capacity crowd at Boston's Orpheum Theater last Wednesday, collecting three curtain calls and stirring up the concert industry as well.

The concert was as much a symbol of anti-facism as it was a demonstration of some hard-driving, politically-influenced rock music. The controversy began when Clash leader, Joe Strummer, urged the audience to move closer to the stage. "I don't know about America, but in England we all spread out in the aisles," Strummer said. He continued, "Who's the fuckin' promoter of this concert?" The audience shouted back, "Don Law." And with that, Strummer proceeded to lash out at the business of concert promotion, calling Law's bouncers "Redshirts," and stating that, once people paid their money, "they can move anywhere they bloody want." The band then broke into a cover of the Bobby Fuller Four's "I Fought the Law," to much audience applause.

All through the show, the presence of Boston's finest was overwhelming--from their "frisks" of patrons entering the theater to their use of motorcycles to clear the crowd after the show.

Opening their act with "City of the Dead," the group did a set which consisted largely of material from either their first album, re-released in America this year, or singles which made the charts in England--"Janie Jones," "Complete Control," "Clash City Rockers," "Hate and War," and the highlight of the evening, "White Riot." In addition, the group did a half dozen new, more mellow, tunes, including one interesting ditty called "Waiting for the Clampdown."

Their version of Junior Murvin's "Police and Thieves," featured an intro with the bands' three guitarists, Strummer, Mick Jones and Paul Simonon vocalizing police sirens, and drummer Nick Headon providing the backup reggae beat.

From the "Give 'Em Enough Rope" album, the group did only three numbers, "English Civil War," "Safe European Home," and "Stay Free." The former was very disappointing, lacking the militant zip provided in last year's Harvard Square performance. The later, with Jone's soft, high-pitched sneering was by far the most melodic, and went down well with the audience.

From a social standpoint, it is regrettable the group has not made it big over here in the States, though it is easily understood.

The problems relevent to the youth of England today--the rise in crime and the subsequent youth-police confrontations, the growing prominence of such reactionary political forces as the National Front, and the civil strife which has led to such overt racial tactics as "Paki-bashing" (where Pakistanian immigrants are beat up by the lower, working class), as well as the tremendous rise in unemployment--have nurtured a revolutionary stance among artists and youth which is the equivilent of the United State's 1960's revolution.

The more passive, anti-intellectual trends among young people over here can not relate, on a massive scale, to such a social situation. And of course, disco music has not been very conducive to sarious musical expression. But none of this lack of American appreciation negates the fact that the Clash are, lyrically and musically, the best band to come out of England since the Rolling Stones.

As an exmaple of their raw power, one need only lok at these lines from "I'm So Bored With the USA," to see their genius:

Yankee detectives are always on the TV
'Cause killers in America work 7 days a week
Never mind the Stars and Stripes, let's break the Watergate tape
I'll salute the new age and I hope nobody escapes.

I'm so bored with the USA
I'm so bored with the USA
But what can I do?

Opening acts were the Undertones, a five-man outfit from Ireland, and Sam and Dave, one of the leading rythym and blues acts of the 60's.

The Undertones performed a set of mostly pop-styled punk numbers, a bit similar sounding, but pretty catchy would eventually like to pledge."

Third Stage parties consisted of dining on house food, getting to know the sisters and the house, and the rules which the members of the house live by. Group sessions or individual talks were held with the rushee in a party type atmosphere. These parties were 30 minutes long, compared to the 20 minute party held the previous evening.

After the various parties, the sisters of each sorority met and discussed the rushees who come to their house. Invitations to attend the next stage of rush were extended to those women who the sisters felt they got to know through the course of the evening.

"A major reason a person would not get asked back to a particular house is because the woman did not meet enough of the sisters," said Helfrich. "If the person missed a party, the sisters may think she is not serious about their house," she said.

Stage four consisted of four 45 minute long parties which provided the sisters of each house and the rushees time to converse and ask questions in a relaxed atmosphere. Social and informative sessions were combined in "theme" parties which included songs and dances by the sisters to entertain the potential members.

Different sororities gave favors, such as plants, to the rushees at this time. The gifts are small tokens of the houses appreciation to the rushees, Helfrich said.

On Friday, the rushees picked up their invitations to Closed Date, which was held last night. Closed Date included a ceremony in each house with the sisters explaining what the house means to them. The rushee may attend only two of these hour long parties.

Between 9 and 10 p.m. last night, the rushees met in the Newman Center and chose the two houses which they would like to pledge. The rushees preference sheet was then matched up with sororities final selection list by the Panhellenic Executive Board. The bids, where rushees are asked to pledge a house, will go out between 3 and 5 p.m today.

One woman interviewed during the rush period said she felt confused. "I did not have enough time to get a real feel for the houses. I have received all my cards (invitations) back, so I am not limited with picking which house to pledge," she said.

"We think we have enough people but they'll be a lot of fine tuning for the first week."

Talbot said he expects 1,000 to 2,000 people today. At the main library a "normal" day is 6,000 to 7,000 people.

"We anticipate a relatively normal day, but we'll just have to wait and see what happens," he said.

Goodell will be open Monday-Thursday 8 a.m. to midnight; Friday 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; and Sunday 10 a.m. to midnight.

melodically. The band is rather undistinguished visually and it reamins to be seen how much appeal they will have in this country when their album is released later in the year.

Tunes performed by the opener included: "Jimmy, Jimmy," "Male Model," and "Jump Boys."

Next came Sam and Dave, the show-stealers. Punk rockers, which comprised the audience, are among the leading "death-to-disco" proponents and some are ignorant of all-black music forms. But this is another reason why the Clash are so great, for they are big fans of reggae and soul, and made it a point to include a black act on their tours. Last year, for instance, they toured with Bo Diddley.

There was some tension at the beginning of the set, with Sam and Dave seeming a bit unsure of themselves, and members of the audience making obscene gestures. But by the end of the set, with a version of their big hit "Soul Man," (that made the Blues Brothers' version sound like poseur garbage) the audience was won over. Also performed was "Hold On, I'm Coming," and "I Thank You," the latter being an appropiate response to the two curtain calls they received.

Sam and Dave have lost none of their vocal prowess. Their music is rythmically as up-to-date as any funk, and it is a shame that their exuberant brand of soul is now shunned in favor of slicker, less moving forms. Someone should record them with some new material (their set was almost entirely their old hits).

Africans rejoice at coup

By RICHARD TOMKINS
Associated Press

BANGUI, Central African Republic —Jubilant crowds toppled a gigantic statue of deposed Emperor Bokassa I on yesterday as heavily armed French soldiers guarded key roads and weaponless local troops swept up debris from a looting binge that followed Bokassa's bloodless ouster.

A happy throng swarmed up to army headquarters and, as unarmed Central African soldiers watched, hauled down the statue, bringing it crashing to the pavement.

Bokassa, who seized power in 1966 from David Dacko, and later anointed himself emperor, was toppled late Thursday night in a French-backed coup led by Dacko. At the time Bokassa was in Libya attempting to obtain financing for his tottering regime in exchange for granting Libya a military base in the northern part of his nation.

The ousted emperor later flew to Paris in his personal jet, but failed to win asylum and was looking for refuge in another country.

Between 400 and 500 French soldiers were sent in from neighboring countries.

Sox split doubleheader

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press

BOSTON—Ron LeFlore led off the 10th inning with a walk, stole his sixth base of the afternoon and scored on Champ Summers' single Sunday, lifting the Detroit Tigers to a 3-2 victory and a split of their doubleheader with the Boston Red Sox.

Boston won the first game 2-1 as Dennis Eckersley snapped a personal five-game losing streak by outdueling Milt Wilcox for his 17th victory.

LeFlore, who had two hits and two stolen bases in the first game, came back with two more singles and four stolen bases in the nightcap, giving him 77 steals for the season. After striking out but reaching first on a passed ball, he scored in the third inning of the second game by stealing second, taking third on a sacrifice and coming home on an infield out.

Boston tied the score in its half of the third. Then Detroit went in front on LeFlore's RBI single before Boston tied it 2-2 on Dwight Evans' 21st homer.

Rookie Dan Petry, 10-4, pitched the first eight innings for Detroit before giving way to Aurelio Lopez. Mike Torrez, 15-13, was the loser.

The Red Sox won the opener when Tom Poquette led off the eighth with a single, moved to second on a sacrifice bunt and scored on a single by Jim Dwyer.

Eckersley allowed nine hits but struck out eight. He has lost 10 games. Wilcox, 12-9, took the loss, allowing only five hits.

Harriers capture first

Collegian Staff

The UMass Women's Cross-Country team finished first out of seven teams in the Huskie Challenge Invitational held Saturday by UConn in Hartford. The team of eight dominated the entire race and finished among the top 20 runners in a field of 80 competitors.

The Minutewomen defeated Rutgers, the defending champions, by 11 points. Coach Pete Pfitzinger pointed to the team's great depth as the key to victory in the 5000 meter (3.1 mile) race.

Supplying that depth were sophomores Judie McCrone, Kathy Petrick and Tricia Moores, who finished third, fourth and seventh respectively. McCrone finished 11 seconds behind Nancy Seeger of Rutgers who won with a time of 18:42.

Junior Linda Welzel, 11th; sophomore Julie Burke, 14th; senior Barb Callanan, 16th; and sophomores Robin Dally, 17th; and 'Dill' Wilson, 19th, supplied a solid finish to help clinch the victory.

The Minutewomen 'B' team finished second in their division to first place Rutgers.

The Huskie Challenge Invitational is held by UConn as a challenge to major schools in the East. Coach Pfitzinger feels that the race is a good indication of how well the team will perform this season.

The Minutewomen's next meet will be against Harvard and Providence this Tuesday at Franklin Park in Boston. Coach Pfitzinger expects Harvard to be one of the Minutewomen's toughest opponents this season.

If your first No. 1 draft choice refuses to play football for you, it's always wise to have a second No. 1 who won't go wondering off someplace else.

The Buffalo Bills lost their top choice, Ohio State linebacker Tom Cousineau, to Canada but most folks forgot they had another No. 1 choice just behind Cousineau. And wide receiver Jerry Butler from Clemson proved Sunday that the Bills' season didn't evaporate when Cousineau went north.

Butler caught four of Joe Ferguson's record five touchdown passes as the Bills staged a second-half rally to rout the New York Jets 46-31. The flanker grabbed 10 passes for 255 yards and scored on plays that covered 5, 75, 74 and 9 yards.

In Sunday's other games, Houston edged Cincinnati 30-27 and Minnesota defeated Green Bay 27-21, both in overtime. Pittsburgh remained unbeaten with a 17-13 victory over Baltimore, New England topped San Diego 27-21, Kansas City ripped Oakland 35-7, Washington downed St. Louis 17-7, Detroit surprised Atlanta 24-23, Tampa Bay stunned Los Angeles 21-6, Miami ripped Chicago 31-16, New Orleans defeated San Francisco 30-21, Philadelphia whipped the New York Giants 17-13 and Denver rallied for a 37-34 victory over Seattle.

Dallas plays at Cleveland in the Monday night game.

Butler was the fifth player selected in last May's NFL draft and he proved explosive against the Jets as Ferguson threw for a career record 367 yards.

The rookie's second TD — a 75-yard play when he grabbed a deflected pass intended for Frank Lewis — came on the final play of the first half and cut Buffalo's halftime deficit to 24-19. It was all Bills after that with Butler grabbing two more TD passes in the second half as the Bills outscored New York 34-0 over one stretch.

Houston had the closest possible call against winless Cincinnati. Toni Fritsch supplied the Oilers' winning points on a 29-yard field goal with just 33 seconds left in overtime. But it wasn't a simple three-pointer. The kick hit the left upright and then bounced over the crossbar for the victory.

The Bengals had forced the game into overtime on a 55- yard field goal by Chris Bahr but then blew a chance to win in the extra session when Bahr missed on a 32-yard kick.

Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals poses with his 938th stolen base of his career during last night's Cardinal's-Mets game in New York. Brock stole the base in the fifth inning to set the all-time career stolen base record. (AP Laserphoto)

Pats stop Chargers; Nelson halts late drive

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — Steve Grogan passed five yards to Russ Francis on the second play of the fourth quarter for the game-winning touchdown, and Steve Nelson's interception clinched the game with 1:28 left, as the New England Patriots eliminated the San Diego Chargers from the National Football League's unbeaten ranks with a 27-21 victory Sunday.

The Patriots led 20-0 in the second quarter, but the Chargers rallied on a 19-yard touchdown pass from Dan Fouts to John Jefferson and a 1-yard scoring run by Clarence Williams before the half ended.

The Chargers threatened to win the game when linebacker Bob Horn picked off Grogan's roll-out pass at the Patriots' 40-yard line and ran in back to the 10 with 1:50 left. However Nelson intercepted Fouts' thirddown pass at the 2-yard line.

After a scoreless third quarter, Grogan found Francis alone in the end zone to give the Patriots, 3-1, a 27-14 lead.

The Chargers capitalized on Glenn Edwards' interception and Williams scored on his second 1-yard run with 4:09 left in the game.

San Diego, also 3-1, trailed 17-0 in the first quarter on Sam Cunningham's 1-yard run, a 10- yard scoring burst by Don Calhoun and John Smith's 31-yard field goal. Smith kicked another 31-yarder in the second quarter, before San Diego began its comeback.

Horn's interception set up the potentional game-winning drive for San Diego, and Fouts moved the Chargers to the 5- yard line before Nelson picked off the pass and sprinted up field.

Until the potentially costly interception, Grogan had passed with pinpoint accuracy, mostly short completions, connecting on 13 of 22 attempts.

San Diego, which hasn't won its first four games since 1966, was stalled in New England territory without a first down for the entire first quarter, before revving its offense in the second period.

Despite the Friday afternoon showers, the UMass men's cross country team looked impressive in their season opener as they overwhelmed Boston College, 21-40. It was the harriers first and only home meet of the season.

UMass junior Kevin Molteni led the way for the harriers as he finished first with the winning time of 25:37. Senior captain Rick Walls finished three seconds behing Molteni to wrap up the one and two spots for the minutemen.

Also placing for UMass were senior Mike Dorian and sophomores Paul Beaulieu and Kevin Corcoran, who finished fourth, fifth, and sixth overall. "It was a good first effort," said harrier coach Ken O'Brien. "I was very impressed, we ran aggressively for the first three and a half miles," said O'Brien.

"We ran well," said Molteni. "The weather wasn't a determining factor, it made the course slow, but we expected to beat them anyway," he added.

The junior varsity harriers also had an easy time of it as they defeated the Boston College J.V. 21-36. Freshman John Marr finished first for the minutemen with the winning time of 26:24.

This Tuesday the harriers will go up against Providence College and Harvard at Franklin Park in Boston. This will probably be the Menutemen's most difficult meet of the season. Last year they lost to both teams, and Providence is currently ranked the number one team in New England.

"Providence, Harvard, Northeastern, and UMass are the four top teams in New England," said O'Brien. "I would say we're pretty even with Harvard though, we beat them in '77 and they beat us in '78, it could be anyone's race," added O'Brien.

Patriots middle linebacker Steve Nelson (57) exults in the arms of teammate Sam Hunt as Mike Hawkins (59) runs in for a hug after Nelson caught a fourth quarter interception on the Pat's goal line to stop a San Diego rally and protect the Pat's 27-21 lead yesterday in Foxboro Mass. (AP Laserphoto)

Pedrow scores 2 TD's

Minutemen maul Bears; 3-14

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Mike McEvilly and Cliff Pedrow scored two touchdowns apiece and freshman sensation Gary Pearson added a 97 yard kickoff return for a TD to lead the UMass football team to its first win of the year, a satisfying 38-14 win over the Black Bears of Maine Saturday, before 4000 fans at soggy Alumni Stadium.

For the Minutemen, it was their 14th consecutive triumph over Maine and their 11th straight Yankee Conference victory. Maine remains winless, they are now 0-3.

The 14 points scored by the Black Bears were the most a Maine team had scored on UMass since 1959, but coach Bob Pickett was not bothered a bit by that piece of trivia, he was too busy highlighting the positive aspects of the game, of which there were many.

The defense, sparked by the ferocious play of end Frank DiTomasso, improved immensely from last week, and held Maine to only 16 yards rushing; the running game, which was stifled by Villanova, came to life this week, as the Minutemen rushed for 201 yards, 62 of them by Pedrow; the passing combination of McEvilly to tight end Marty Paglione was a big force in the game. Paglione caught five passes for 55 yards and was awarded the game ball.

Perhaps the most promising aspect of the contest was the spirited play of the freshmen who saw action late in the game, particularly runningbacks Pearson and Rich Jenkins who showed UMass fans that they have a lot to look forward to in the years ahead.

The Minutemen got on the scoreboard quickly against Maine, as they scored on their first posssission. Three big third down conversions highlighted the drive, which ended with McEvilly carrying the ball the final yard. Sandro Vitiello's conversion made the score 7-0.

UMass went on top 14-0, with four minutes left in the first half, when McEvilly scored again, this time on a seven-yard run which capped a seven-play, 52 yard drive.

In between UMass scores, it was the Maine offense which dominated things. The Black Bears moved the ball well, especially through the air, but could not put the ball in the end zone.

Following a Steve Vermette interception, Maine drove the ball all the way down to the UMass 11, but could not punch it in. A bad snap from center on a 28 yard field goal attempt by Paul Pierce left the Black Bears empty handed.

Early in the second quarter, Maine drove from its own 31 all the way to the UMass 10. On 3rd and goal from the 12, Maine quarterback John Tursky was pressured into intentionally grounding the football. The penalty took the ball back to the 29, ending another Maine drive in frustration.

The Minutemen increased their lead late in the second quarter. After taking a punt on the Maine 43, UMass drove the ball quickly, and scored in just five plays. On a 2nd and 10 from the 13, Pedrow bulled his way to the four. On the next play, McEvilly went to Pedrow again, and the senior full back carried it in to make it 20-0. Vitiello's kick failed, and that was the way the half ended.

In the third quarter, Pedrow went to work again. On a 3rd and 1 play at the Maine 24, Pedrow picked up 10 yards and a first down. After an off-sides call on Maine, Pedrow picked up the final nine yards on a beautiful run down the left side line, giving the Minutemen a commanding 26-0 lead. McEvilly passed to Kevin O'Connor for the two point conversion and UMass was up by four touchdowns.

The Black Bears finally got on the board early in the fourth quarter. After a nifty 27-yard pass completion from Tusky to sophomore Tom Torrisi put the ball on the UMass 34, the Minutemen were called for pass interference, giving Maine a first and goal at the three yard line. Three plays later, junior fullback Steve McCue banged in from the one, making it 28-7.

On the ensueing kickoff, Gary Pearson, the man who may make everyone forget all about Dennis Dent, took the ball on the three yard line, cut to the right side line and didn't stop running till he had the first touchdown of his UMass career.

After a 36-yard field goal by Vittiello made it 38-7, Maine took advantage of another pass interference call to score its second touchdown. (UMass had 10 penalties on the day for a whopping 159 yards.) The penalty gave the Black Bears a first down at the UMass 16, and on the next play, Tursky found freshman runningback Lorenzo Bouier all alone in the right corner of the end zone.

Almost lost in the big UMass victory was the fine performance turned in by Tursky. The junior quarterback had an excellent day for himself, going 14 of 26 for 222 yards, despite heavy pressure from the UMass defensive line.

The Minutemen will try to make it two in a row next week, when they travel to Cambridge to try to gain revenge on the Crimson of Harvard, who shut out UMass last year, 10-0.

Spikers sweep twinbill

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Last Saturday afternoon, the UMass women's volleyball team managed to defeat the Universities of New Hampshire and Vermont at NOPE gym.

Officials' decisions seemed to set the tempo throughout all the matches; at times, it seemed that entire matches could have been won or lost by that one official.

UMass had its share of decisions from the start, as they met Vermont. After team blocking and spiking decimated Vermont in the first game, 15-1, problems with positioning ruined the UMass offense; Vermont pulled out a 15-11 win. The deciding game saw UMass overcome a 9-3 deficit with awesome blocking and passing to win the match 15-11.

Of the Vermont match, UMass coach Elaine Marasco said, "We were running a new type of offense specially designed for each player's ability. In that second game, UMass was using the new offense; some players got out of position as a result of substitutions. The officials penalized us; we couldn't get our offense going, and we lost. Considering what happened in the third game, we played fantastically."

New Hampshire's team consisted of height; they used that height to their advantage to attempt stopping UMass at the net. In the first game, net play was extremely tight, as blockers locked horns to prevent the ball from landing on their side. UMass, aided by Joyce Gresl and Brenda Simmons, squeaked by, 15-13. UNH then spiked their way to a 15-5 drubbing. The UMass defense, spearheaded by Chris Perron, stopped UNH cold with digging and near-perfect blocking and spiking to win 15-7.

"Our offense came together against UNH," said Marasco, "We overcame certain circumstances that were prevalent in the Vermont match. Overall, the team had more cohesion; we managed to open up our outside hitters, who were very effective."

UMass next plays Boston College Tuesday evening at NOPE gym.

Booters tie in OT; still without 1st win

By JIM DEGNIM
Collegian Staff

In what is getting to be a habit, the UMass men's soccer team tied Southern Connecticut State College in overtime Saturday in New Haven, 1-1. In the team's only previous game, the booters and Bridgeport University played to a 2-2 tie, also in overtime.

UMass coach Russ Kidd said he was "pessimistic" going into the Southern Connecticut game, partly because his team hadn't played that well in the Bridgeport game, and partly because the Owls were ranked 20th in the country and third in New England.

"But," Kidd said, "We played much better than we did against Bridgeport, and I'm very happy to get out of there with a tie."

Southern Connecticut scored first when Owl Jason Whiteman beat UMass goalie Mark Marilla at 29 minutes of the first half. UMass tied it when Ludlow's Tony M. Dias scored at 38 minutes of the same half. Dias, who is a sophomore, is emerging as the team's top scorer with 3 goals in 2 games.

Southern Connecticut was forced to play much of the second half a man short, as one of its players recieved a red card. During this time, Kidd said, "We had the edge in play, but we just couldn't score." The best UMass scoring bid was a header by Doug White which went just over the crossbar.

Although he had only four saves, goalie Marilla played what Kidd called "an excellent game." Senior fullback Bret Simon continued the fine play he showed against Bridgeport, causing Kidd to remark, "He's given us two tremendous games."

Kidd, a former UMass lacrosse and hockey standout, was also impressed by freshman winger Fritz Pike of nearby Greenfield. "He's a real find for us," Kidd said.

Southern Connecticut outshot UMass 13-9 in the game played on a wet field.

BOOTER BANTER: Next game for the booters is Wednesday against the Ephmen of Williams College. It's the first home game for the team. According to Kidd, "We're anxious to play at home, as all of our scrimmages and both regular season games have been on the road."

THE ORCHARD HILL THIRD WORLD CENTER

"Now the thing is to get support to get money we need to run the Center"
JULIAN TYNES, Co-Director

This is the first in a series of articles that will appear in Nummo on the plight of Third World organizations on campus.

Vukani Magubane

The Orchard Hill Third World Center, located in Dickinson House, was opened in 1973 to provide area students with a place to study, relax and get together.

This semester the center almost did not open. According to the center's directors, Wilma and Julian Tynes "The Orchard Hill Area government OHAG President refused to give us the keys to the center saying that there were no co-ordinators."

"The area government disputed that there weren't any co-ordinators because there wasn't any proof of an equal opportunity search, which would have given non-Third World people an opportunity to apply", said Julian. According to Wilma, the papers which proved that she and Julian were last years' co-ordinators trainee's were locked up in the center, and they were denied access to the keys.

"It was suggested by the area director, Joe Batista that we consolidate with the New World Center in Central and since McIntyre House was thinking of shutting it down, we would get all the money" Wilma commented. I told him that I didn't think that Julian or the New World co-ordinator would like the idea."

After meeting with OHAG, the center was opened on Tuesday September 11.

"Now the thing is to get support to get the money we need to run the center", said Julian.

"Our budget has not yet been approved and is going to be discussed on Sunday at the OHAG meeting", Julian commented.

According to Julian, the center plans on being very active this semester. We plan to have study programs involving various people to tutor in different areas such as math, spanish, writing etc, which will help prevent academic probation.

In addition to tutoring services the center will be sponsoring guest lecturers from the Afro-Am department, jazz workshops, a Parents Day Program and a small scale high school recruitment program; along with films, the center would also like to hold events during black history month in conjunction with other third world centers, as well as provide a study place with books and lecture notes.

According to Julian one of McIntyre Houses' administrative personnel told last years' co-ordinator that the administration will in five year's completely eliminate all third world centers because they feel there is no further use for them. For example, look at the Orchard Hill Third world corridors which no longer exist but only two years ago were filled.

Nummo News is editorially autonomous of the Massacusetts Daily Collegian. It exists due to past struggles of Black Students to obtain consistent News coverage of Third World peoples.

WE'RE ON THE MOVE - FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

(Part One of a Two Part Series)
By Chaka Zulu

Greetings Brothers and Sisters! I find that this is the most intelligent way I can greet you all who're reading this article. It's better than saying "hi", because very many of our people have been "high" for too long in the wrong way. I won't say hello, because hell is low and ever since the Black Man has been in America we've been in Hell. I can't say "Good Morning", "Good Evening", or "Peace", because ever since the European set foot in Africa and everywhere else, there has been no "Good Morning", or "Good Evening" or "Peace" for anyone. I can never say "Good Morning", "Good Evening" or "Peace" wholeheartedly to anyone until Black people in America can go to bed in the evening free from injustice, exploitation and racism, and we can wake up in the morning, knowing that we are a free and equal people in a world of free and equal nations and states with our own respected national identity and culture.

This article is about a truly historic event that will take place on Monday November 5, 1979 at the United Nations. African-Americans from all over the country, individuals and organizations will convene in New York at the United Nations to bring the plight of the African-American before the eyes of the World. Hundreds will raise their voices to ask such an honorable and leading body of International Justice and World Peace to question the United States government about the condition of the Black people under its jurisdiction. They will ask that all the countries represented at the United Nations train their scruntinizing eye on the practices of the U.S. government and all the states bound to it, and their municipalities, to hold them accountable for the degraded and exploited condition of such a large number of its population who are of African decent.

It was Malcolm X in the early sixties who stated "When you expand the civil rights struggle to the level of Human Rights you can then take the case of the Black man in this country before the nations in the U.N... Uncle Sam should be taken to court and made to tell why the Black Man in America is not free in a so-called free society. Uncle Sam should be taken to the U.N. and charged with violating the U.N. charter on Human Rights.'

The initiative for organizing and mobilizing for such an historic event was taken by the National Black Human Rights Coalition, a united group of individuals and organizations whose purpose is to mobilize and direct the energies of our people toward a constructive and concrete goal, the recognition by the U.N. that the Human Rights of the African-American in the U.S. has been violated and is continually being violated, an effective remedy proposed by U.N. and African-American sources, and official international recognition of the plight and the struggle of U.S. Blacksto achieve those aims stated in the U.N. charter on Human Rights.

Around this time last year The National Black Human Rights Coalition came together, as Black organizations and individuals saw the need for undertaking such an important task. This formation barely preceded the petitioning of the United Nations commission on Human Rights and subcommission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, charging the U.S. government with violations of the U.N. Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Historically speaking the struggle for Human Rights and appealling to the United Nations have long been integral parts of our struggle. "From David Walker who in 1829 wrote an appeal to the colored citizen of the world to rise up and overthrow slavery to Marcus Garvey and his Declarion of Rights of Black People; to William Patterson who in the 1950's wrote "We Charge Genocide" which outlines in a petition to the U.N. the genocidal conditions and forced dehumanization of Black people in America; to Malcolm X in the 1960's who in his travels around the world gained support for our people and began to project a strategy of taking the struggle from the arena of civil rights to the international arena of Human Rights. Also during this period many activists contributed to raising the issue of Human Rights at home and abroad. Richard Wright, W.E.B. DuBois, Paul Robeson, Ossie Davis, and Robert Williams (who while in Asia was instrumental in winning support for our cause from the Chinese), Queen Mother Moore, and a long list of others who have tried to bring the question of the conditions of Black people into an international context.

WE are raising the issue of Human Rights because these are a right that are fundamental to the Life, Liberty and Happiness of all human beings wherever they are located but have been continually denied to the Black Man here in America. These are a catagory of rights that are not only guaranteed to an individual or group by the state under whose jurisdiction they live, but rights which should be recognized and guaranteed to a person or group by the very fact they are alive.

Indeed! Human Rights are those rights which protect the individual from political repression such as the Bill of Rights, the 14th amendment of the constitution and those articles and amendments that cite equal participation of all citizens in the choosing of their governments. But Human Rights also include the rights to economic security, security from unemployment, the right to a national identity, and freedom from its subversion by the state apparatus. The right to preservation of our culture, i.e. the recognition and preservation of the cultures of minority nationalities. The right, free from any form of political repression, to organize for our own self interests and the recognition of our representatives.

What is the significance of Nov. 5th? It has traditionally been Black Solidarity Day. It has historically been a day when Black people in New York, the Empire State, do not go to work and boycott every institution that has participated in and benefitted from their exploitation and oppression. the political significance of the Black Solidarity Day general strikes and boycotts are that they are concrete examples of protest against the economic injustice, the racial injustice, the illegal and "extra legal" methods employed by all levels of "The Government" that prevent African – American and other minority nationalities in this country from sharing in the benefits of the constitution and the economy. On this day, every year we demonstrate that we are aware of the tricks and the lies, and that we are displeased, and that it is time the rest of the world stopped being deceived!!!

BLACK ORACLE

By Gary Lee

I recently saw the last half hour of the "Tomorrow Show" with Jessica Savage sitting in for Tom Snyder. She could have been Mr. Snyder's clone were it not for her blond hair and blue eyes. Ms. Savage is an anchorwoman for NBC News and she seems to have internalized many of Mr. Snyder's expressions and methods of interviewing. None of this however, could overshadow the intensity exuded by her guest, Mr. James Baldwin, poet, author, and universal thinker par excellence.

Mr. Baldwin (The Fire Next Time, Other Side of the Mountain, etc.) appeared very cool, quite self-assured, and extremely thorough as I watched him talk about Andrew Young, U.S. Race Relations, and the State of the World. Mr. Baldwin stated that he felt that President Carter was in trouble because he did not understand the importance of Andrew Young's position in the world as an influential African-American. Mr. Baldwin further stated that Mr. Young could sense the pulse of peoples throughout the "First World" (a term referring to those nations which are the home of people of color with a rich, boundless history and culture; as opposed to the economic term "Third World". Mr. Young had the foresight that Carter and his advisors did not in many matters not just the Middle East. "Management" was not ready to acknowledge this and Baldwin feels that Carter has done himself irreparable harm by accepting Young's resignation.

Mr. Baldwin said that he felt that not much had changed in the area of Black-White relations in this country. With all sorts of legislative manuevers, the reality of the situation is that "Society is based on institutions, and one cannot begin to talk about equality among people when those institutions are racist." He said that there is a need for redistribution of wealth as well as a complete reconstruction of many of our society's institutions.

Mr. Baldwin remarked that he left Harlem for France, not to escape (as Ms. Savage kept insisting because Westernism is everywhere) but to live in a place where he felt he could do whatever was necessary to develop himself more fully. As evidence of this he said that twice he had left this country to write books and upon each return he had completed his work. He has just finished another book which is partly autobiographical.

Baldwin in reference to nationalist movements all over the globe stated, "THE WORLD IS NOT WHITE..... The Western world is collapsing, thirty years ago the sun never set on the British Empire, today the sun can't find it." In my opinion this man is to be listened to and his words taken seriously. He has the depth of thought, universal vision, and an abudance of intense energy. We will be hearing more from Mr. James Baldwin.

FILM REVIEW "The History of the Black Theatre movement", by Sartreina Cooper.

Despite heavy rain Friday night, students anxiously filled the Campus Center Auditorium to view "The History of the Black Theatre Movement" presented by the Third World Theatre Series.

The documentary showed the beginnings of such Black Theatres as the "Negro Ensemble" and "The National Black Theatre", both which started in 1968

It also presented rare excerpts from works of the sixty's such as "The Dutchman" in 1964, "Raisin in the Sun", and finally to the present day plays such as "For Colored Girls", and "Don't Bother Me I Can't Cope".

There were Critics who expressed their views on the Black Theatre Movement such as: Vinette Carroll, director; Yusef Iman, Actor and writer; Ed Bullins, Minister of Culture for the Black Panther Party and actor; Gil Moses, co-founder of the Free Southern Theatre; Shauneille Perry, director; Glynn Turman, actor; and James Earl Jones, an actor who played every conceivable role in Shakespeare's plays.

The goal of the documentary was to express the meaning and goals of the Black Theatre. It shows the Black Theatre to be the organic part of community action and its job is to help transform society.

The job of the Black Theatre is to help the society see the difference between Black people being Black people and Black people acting like Black people on stage.

El autobus color plata de cristales ahumados se llama "Coyote de la Pampa". Entra en los arrabales de Managua, la sultana del Pacifico, tantas veces engullida, que vuelve a levantarse siempre a las orillas de su lago con olor a fiebre, la ciudad de los terremotos, de los eucaliptos y de los enterrados vivos.

El conductor lleva gafas osxueA, UNA Thompson" sobre el asiento, y hace avanzar el vehículo como a travesdeunincendio. Setrata del autobus del retorno, y los refugiados miran con ojos desencajados sin alcanzar a reconocer lo que fuera el barrio de los ricos. Esta es la ciudad prohibida donde se liquidaba por las buenas a los limpiabotas y vendedores de periodicos, donde las alumnas del Convento de los Pajaros, falda azul marino plisada y zapatos blancos regresaban a casa escoltadas por los "half tracks", y donde las nineras paseaban cochecitos de altas ruedas relucientes como feretros bajo la protecion de guardias en equipo de combate. Las torres de las villas bavaras se han desplomado en los jardines ingleses ya invadidos por la maleza, y tan solo los mastines, que antaño brincaban como pumas al otro lado de las verjas, se mantienen en sus puestos, convertidos en carrona que los gusanos devoran.

En la estación de autobues última realización del Presidente Somoza, como lo recuerda una losa de bronce que parece una tumba, los viajeros se hacinan como fantasmas. Nadie se atreve a salir por la ciudad hambrienta, y todos guardan celosamente sus sacos de arroz y sus cajetillas de tabaco. Afuera, en la calle todavia desierta, sembrada de embudos abiertos por los obuses, se oye a un zapatero martillear sobre la suela en un cuchitril angosto y oscuro. Mas allá, la palabra pastoral que brota de un altavoz colgado sobre la puerta de una iglesia de cemento cuya cruz yace en tierra.

El zapatero es un antiguo abogado, y el predicador, un monje guerrero, el padre Miguel de Escoto, consejero del Gobierno de Reconstruccion Nacional, que no hace sino repetir que la revolución sandinista no es anticristiana. Desde su puesto de mando, instalado en las escuelas Abraham Lincoln, en la antigua calle de los médicos y de los dentistas, cuyas salas de espera se abrian mediante puertas de doble batiente como los "saloons" del Oeste, el comandante Cero, Eden Pastora Gómez, viceministro del Interior, explica que la revolución sandinista no es comunista y que la URSS no ayuda al nuevo régimen. En el Palacio Nacional, rodeado aun de sacos terreros cuyas balaustradas coloniales cuelgan sobre el vacío, otro miembro de la Junta, Alfonso Rodeso, afirma que Nicaragua no recibe ayuda alguna de los Estados Unidos, mientras que el ministro del Interior, Tomas Borge, ligado, segun se dice a Fidel Castro lamenta amargamente la indiferencia cubana.

Como se ve, los sandinistas se definen por la negativa. No llegan a conferirle una personalidad a su neutralismo. Ideológicamente dispersos, andan errantes entre las ruinas que arrancaron a Somoza. Los somocistas nos han dejado un país quemado, exangüe, dividido por el odio dice el arzobispo de Managua, Miguel Obando y Bravo, y este es el instante en que el Gobierno no acaba de dar respuesta a la situación. Los sandinistas no terminan, en efecto, de desbrozar los escombros de la guerra, y Mangua continua siendo el mueseo fúnebre de la dictadura difunta.

En la sede medieval de la Policía somocista que parece un tribunal de la Inquisición todavia cuelgan las guirnaldas del último banquete anual de los oficiales de la Seguridad, y pueden aun leérse, entre un acordeón y una guitarra rajada, los menús compuestos por un chef llegado de El Salvador. En los muros ennegrecidos de lo que fué Ministerio de Agricultura se ven fotos de Somoza asistiendo a festejos pueblerinos, tocado de un gran sombrero, acariciando sementales premiados y vacas de concurso. El hospital de Managua era bajo su reinado, un vergel tropical que reinado, un vergel tropical que empleaba mas jardineros que médicos, ya que, como todos los tiranos, amaba mas a las flores que a los hombres.

En cambio, todavia puede uno darse de bruces, al doblar un corredor destartalado, con una foto que le representa vigilando, con una tosqe ternura, simulacros de vacunacion contra todas las epidemias que tuvo el placer de decretar y de combatir, desde la peste hasta el pian (1). Por doquier se le ve haciendo como que alfabetiza ninos, repuebla bosques o riega tierras, siempre descendiendo del helicóptero, omnipresente siempre, porque, no contento con reinar holgazanamente mediante el terror, Somoza oficiaba, celebraba la misa del poder.

En America el poder es algo que sé ve algo que se palpa. Para descubrirlo hay que ir de una antigua escuela metodista a un edificio a punto de desplomarse. El comandante Cero, el mismo que asestó el primer golpe decisivo a Somoza apoderandose del Palacio Nacional, el vencedor de la batalla de Rivas, el Empecinado del sandinismo, desempeña ahora funciones de comisario de barriada. Los demás miembros de la frontera de Honduras para oponerse a un eventual contraataque de Somoza hijo, que conserva una cincuentena de ex guardias nacionales, como si los jefes de la revolucion quisieran seguir siendo guerrilleros, como si tuviesen miedo a soltar sus armas; los otros andan por Panamá o por Cuba...

"Han derribado a Somoza y eso les basta dice un diplomático britanico, pero han sustituido la dictadura por el vacio. Los sandinistas tienen miedo del poder. El Presidente Figueras, ex jefe del Estado de Costa Rica, que organizó, hace un cuarto de siglo, el asesinato de Somoza padre, acaba de instalarse con sus noventa y dos años en

Managua, entre los escombros del hotel Carlos, para aconsejar a la Junta. Pero ellos no quieren líderes, y tienen razón. No quieren una revolución doctrinaria y alineada, y tienen razón. Sin embargo, tampoco se gobierna con la ausencia un pueblo ahogado por cuarenta años de dictadura y consumido por dos de guerra. El sandinismo sigue siendo una revolución romántica.

Absorbidos por las necesidades de la clandestinidad, primero, y por las de la guerra, despues, los jefes sandinistas, en realidad, no conocen bien a su propio pueblo. Es ahora cuando comienzan a descubrirlo. Un pueblo desconcertante en verdad: sandinista de corazón, por encima de todo, pero que tenia que serlo para poder vivir, cultivar las tierras de Somoza, educar a su numerosa prole y enrollarse alguna eelguna vez en el Ejército. Un pueblo con altas tasas de analfabetismo, ya que Somoza no construía escuelas para los pobres. Un pueblo, en suma, que teme al porvenir, porque no ve en el presente a nadie que haga siquiera ademán de gobernar.

Los ricos se han marchado, dejando sus palacios y sus perros aullando a la muerte, y los pobres, expulsados por los bombardeos y el hambre, no se atreven a volver a casa. Son casi un millon los que, diseminados por la America Central, merodean tristemente las fronteras sonando con su regreso. Cada familia delega a uno de sus miembros para quevaya a investigar que es lo que ocurre, compruebe si ya no se mata y vea si es posible hallar algo que comer.

Erraran todavía por largo tiempo en torno a su país, ya que estan escaldados por cuarenta años de desesperación y de pasividad. Asoman a la frontera de Honduras, donde son rechazados sin discriminacion por el comandante Chumbo, que les confunde con los guardias nacionales de Somoza hijo. Acuden al Salvador, donde reciben alojamiento en pequeños hotelitos de la capital, calle Concepción, y donde se les reconoce por su manera de echar la siesta tumbados en las hamacas de los patios: madres que ríen un poco demasiado fuerte sin olvidar su angustia, padres que charlan gravemente con el aire de patriarcas humillado, y niños que corretean por los adoquines. Los niños son siempre héroes en el exilio.

En la carretera Panamericana estan a merced de los conductores de camiones internacionales, los señores del camino, que les harán pagar a precio de oro el viajar sentados sobre la cartola durante treinta y seis horas de ruta, que saben explotar sus impaciencias de regresar o de partir, para aquellos que se creen comprometidos con los somocistas, cuando no han sido, en la mayoría de los casos, mas que sus víctimas. En Peñas Blancas, en Costa Rica, esperan dias y dias, bajo las tejavanas de la aduana, a que la frontera se abra, y cuando se abre por fin, más de una vez renuncian a entrar o se dan la media vuelta asustados por un burdo rumor lanzado por el propio camionero.

Managua se ha convertido en las ciudad de la ausencia. Los que se marcharon no han regresado todavía, y los que se quedaron siempre se esconden En la puerta de la logia masonica del Pacífico puede leerse un letrero: "Aqui se vende hielo en cubitos". Eso era antes de la guerra, bajo Somoza, que había cerrado la logia y expulsado a los francmasones. Hoy la revolucion ha desterrado los cubitos de hielo, y los francmasones no han vuelto, como tampoco los vulgares albañiles sin mandil, para reconstruir la ciudad, que habrá de leventarse por completo de la nada. No existe mercado negro por la sencilla razón de que nada hay, e incluso el dólar ha perdido su poder. Los cigarrillos se cambian por carne que llega en moto de haciendas sin dueño donde los rebaños han sido muertos y el hedo de su podredumbre suplanta el de los cadáveres.

De día, Managua pertenece a las unidades del comandante Cero, Edén Pastora, quien, en la escuela de Abraham Lincoln, intenta enseñar a sus hombres a mantener el orden en la capital, donde todavía ayer tuvo el trabajo y la gloria de sembrar el desorden. De noche, Managua pertenece a todos los que posean un arma. Desde las seis de la tarde comienzan los tiroteos. Son los antiguos guardias nacionales que salen a la busqueda de comida. Viven escondidos durante el día entre las ruinas, y salen en bandas por la noche. No es que sean ya somocistas: son, sencillamente, lobos. Puede que queden varios millares de ellos en la ciudad, donde tratan de esquivara las patrullas sandinistas.

El comandante Edén Pastora ha advertido a la poblacion: "No hay toque de queda, pero nadie salga de casa despues de la caida del sol". La gente obedece y se retira a sus casas, es decir, a las tiendas de campana facilitadas por la Cruz Roja. Al comandante Cero le gustaría surtir de uniformes a sus hombres, que llegan a matarse entre ellos por error, pero habria que pedirselos a los americanos. El senador Zorinski, que acaba de llegar a Managua, trata por todos los medios de convencer a la Junta de que los Estado Unidos estan dispuestos a entregarles lo que quieran – salvo Somoza, en fin, al menos no tan aprisa. Se le ve pasar, protegido por sandinistas armados, en un viejo Lincoln perteneciente al antiguo dictador, y hace la vista gorda ante las inscripciones que acusan a los gringos de sembrar el terror por todo el mundo.

Pero el comandante Cero hace que la ciudad funcione. De vez en cuando, el mismo se ausenta, desaparece. "Tiene que reflexionar", dicen sus hombres. Entonces todo el mundo espera: los habitantes, en sus madrigueras; los refugiados, en las aduanas, y tambien los cuatro mil quinientos guardias nacionales somocistas hacinados en todas las prisiones del país. No son, bien es verdad, maltratados, pero apenas si reciben una misera racion de comida cada treinta horas. Piden ser juzgados, pero no hay jueces. No los ha habido jamas en Nicaragua. Hasta esto habra que improvisar.

Hay un sector de Managua que ha conservado la calma en todo momento. Es la parte Norte de la ciudad, que fue arrasada por un terremoto en 1972 y abandonada de inmediato. Es la ciudad de los muertos, pero no mas triste hoy que la de los vivos, de donde llegan a veces, asi lo aseguran las gentes de Managua, gritos de personas sepultadas que siguen todavía.

El comandante Edén Pastora quisiera uniformar a sus hombres, que, por error, se matan mutuamente en las noches de Managua.

LA CONFERNCIA DE LOS PAISES DEL TERCER MUNDO EN LA HAVANA

¿ TRIUNFO PARA CASTRO Y JAQUE PARA EL " IMPERIALISMO YANQUI "?

Siendo Fidel Castro el triunfal anfitrión y maestro de ceremonias en la Havana, Cuba, se celebró la famosa Conferencia de los Paises Tercermundistas o No Alineados a principios del mes de septiembre. Allí se cocurrieron 52 jefes de estado y líderes de movimientos de liberación nacional, en total fueron representantes de 92 naciones que suman una población de 1500 millones de personas. En la Conferencia se aprobaron resoluciones de politica internacional y que primordialmente condenan al 'IMPERIALISMO YANQUI' y a sus aliados como Israel, Egipto y China. Ademas hicieron responsables a los paises europeos de continuar apoyando a los regimens 'racistas' de Zimbabwe-Rodesia, Sudafrica y Namibia. Tales resoluciones aprobadas en la conferencia, pueden tener un impacto enorme en la proxima Asamblea Nacional de las Naciones Unidas que se reúnen a fines de este mes en Nueva York, mas aun, presenta un grave dilema para los Estados Unidos en política exterior.

La comida del día en la conferencia fueron los jaques que Fidel puso efusivamente en contra del 'imperialismo yanqui'. Abrió la conferencia primeramente denunciando que ' los imperialistas yanquis con sus nuevos (China) y viejos aliados no querían que esta conferencia fuera celebrada'. Luego prosiguió diciendo que los E.U. 'emplearon años en organizar y preparar metódicamente el asesinato de los líderes de la revolución cubana, usando los medios mas sofisticados de conspiracion y crimen'. ¡Y que sin embargo recalco el líder comunista, que E.U. "aun no se han dignado disculparse por tan abominables acciones de gente incivilizada". Asimismo el condenó el bloqueo economico impuesto por los E.U. que estrangula la economía de la isla. Inclusive les reclamó el territorio cubano que aun es ocupado por la base naval militar de E.U. en la bahía de Guantanamo.

'All I know, it's not as much fun with the Russians'

The Christian Science Monitor

Sobre la situación política de Puerto Rico y recibiendo todo el apoyo de la conferencia, Fidel declaró que "nosotros reiteramos nuestra solaridad firme y decidida con el pueblo fraternal de Puerto Rico, a quienes su derecho de autodeterminación e independencia ha sido tercamente negado por el poder colonialista" (refiriéndose por supuesto a E.U.). China fue criticada por sus incursiones belicas con Vietnam, y Fidel brindó su apoyo total al gobierno Vietnamita del Premier Phan Van Dong, recordando el juramento cubano de que ellos estan dispuestos a morir por Vietnam.

También concurrieron los jefes de movimientos de liberación nacional como; Josha Nkomo y Roberto Mugabe; líderes del Frente Patriótico de Zimbabwe y Sam Nujoma; jefe de la Organización Popular del Suroeste de Namibia. La presencia de Yassir Arafat; Jefe de la Organización pro Liberación de Palestina no pudo faltar, quien junto con el Rey Hussein de Jordania rechazaron categóricamente las negociaciones unilaterales de Anuar Sadat;Presidente de Egipto con el gobierno de Israel. Sadat fué condenado por haber traicionado la causa árabe firmando los acuerdos de Camp David. Tales acuardos fueron vistos como obstáculo que priva a los palestinos de su derecho de autodeterminacion e independencia.

El discurso del Presidente de Yugoslavia; Josip Broz Tito, de quienes los norteamericanos pronosticaban que iba a questionar y desafiar a Castro como auténtico líder de los países no alineados, criticando sus nexos y acuerdos políticos, económicos y militares con la Unión Soviética, nunca presento una problemática política para el líder cubano. Sin embargo Tito urgió a los miembros de la asamblea que "mantuvieran su independencia fuera de las superpotencias y de la intervencion extranjera".

Irónicamente, y pese al furor y escandalo político que causó en E.U. la presencia de una brigada de combate rusa en Cuba, este tema ni siquiera fué discutido en la conferencia, salvo algunos comentarios extraoficiales sin trascendencia. Pero en ningún momento se le considero como un asunto de importancia que fuera afectar o inferir en el resultado de la reunión. Inclusive se le vió como una mas de las maniobras sucias de E.U.en contra de la CONFERENCIA.

Por lo tanto, los Estados Unidos, despues de haber fracasado en sus intentos diplomáticos alrededor del mundo de evitar los resultados de la conferencia, se encuentran en un grave dilema. Y para poder evitar una confrontación con el Tercer Mundo, E.U. tendrá que tomar decisiones muy difíciles que le esperan en el futuro. Ya los políticos estadounidenses se estan preguntando:

¿Cómo pueden los E.U. satisfacer las demandas del Tercer Mundo que Israel devuelva todos los terrenos ocupados de los árabes y otorguen a los palestinos un estado independiente?

Existe algun medio en el que E.U. pueda forzar un nuevo régimen de mayoría negra en Salisburg y así poder cumplir con las demandas del Frente Patriótico?

¿ Estará E.U. de acuerdo en evacuar la base naval americana estacionada en Guantanamo y terminar con el embargo económico a Cuba?

Estará E.U. de acuerdo en otorgar independencia para Puerto Rico?

Finalmente y para empeorarle las cosas a los norteamericanos, Fidel Castro con su prestigio enaltecido, bien puede ser electo al Concilio de Seguridad de las Naciones Unidas, y si los cubanos logran obtener el asiento rotativo reservado para Latinoamerica (a quienes consideran con grandes probabilidades). Si esto ocurre, Fidel irá a las Naciones Unidas y reaparecerá como el máximo líder del Tercer Mundo y quien seguramente desde allí continuará poniendo en jaque al gobierno de E.U. Sólo resta a Estados Unidos hacer las jugadas mas estratégicas que eviten un encuentro con el Tercer Mundo, a la vez que también permita ejercer su influencia en las movidas políticas de los paises de occidente. En el tablero de ajedrez mundial que se jugara an la Asamblea General de las Naciones Unidas a finales de Septiembre y principios de Octubre, escucharemos a los grandes líderes del mundo exponer sus ponencias y estrategias para las soluciones de este intrincado y problematico ajedrez mundial en donde los únicos que salen ganando son los héroes que ya murieron luchando por un mundo mejor.

AFRICA IN THE U·S·

• The Congressional ad hoc monitoring group on southern Africa wrote to Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the Prime Minister of Zimbabwe Rhodesia, in August about reports it had received of 27 secret executions of prisoners in Salisbury in July.

"We are only asking questions in our letter," said Rep. Thomas Downey (D-NY), the group's coordinator. "The full implications of the matter will depend upon Bishop Muzorewa's answer."

The letter was signed by two senators and 25 representatives.

• General Motors will inject an additional $23.6 million equity investment into its South African subsidiary in an effort to revive slumping car sales.

The major purpose of the investment is to tool up for GM's new small car entry next February. Lack of a small car to benefit from the fuel crisis has been a big factor in the sales slide, from 9 percent of the market last year to the current 6 percent.

Another reason for the investment is to fund a $4.6 million program to continue desegregating workers' facilities and to expand the company's training plan.

• Michigan newspaper publisher John McGoff has had to pay a price for his links with South Africa.

McGoff was fined $10,000 in July by a federal judge in San Francisco for not answering questions about the source of funds for his 1974 purchase of the Sacramento Union.

According to the South African government, Department of Information money was provided to McGoff for the purchase of the Washington Star, but when that deal fell through McGoff used $6 million of the funds to buy the Sacramento paper.

However, McGoff denied that he had ever been an "agent" or "front" for the South African government, without specifically denying that he used money from the Information slush fund to buy newspapers in the U.S.

The judge imposed the fine at a pretrial hearing on a $43 million antitrust suit filed by McGoff against his paper's rival, the Sacramento Bee. The Bee has filed a countersuit.

Stepped-up pass raids in South Africa accompany influx control 'reforms'

Although Dr. Pieter Koornhof, the Minister of Cooperation and Development, said his government has "declared war on the dompas [pass laws for blacks]," blacks and social workers claimed that pass raids have been intensified this year.

The Black Sash welfare organization said in July the daily average number of blacks prosecuted for dompas offenses in Johannesburg alone had increased from 107 in 1978 to 165 in the first quarter of this year.

In July, the government announced a "relaxation" of the pass laws, which regulate where every adult black can live and work. Koornhof ruled that any black who has been living "illegally" in a white area for three years, or working one year for the same employer, could register as a legal worker and avoid being "endorsed out" to the impoverished homelands.

The government's reprieve followed the dismissal of thousands of "illegal" workers by employers worried about the approaching deadline for a huge increase in fines they must pay for illegally employing blacks, from $118 to $590. At the same time he announced the reprieve, Koornhof warned of strict enforcement of influx control against new arrivals from the rural areas.

Fred van Wyck, director of the Institute of Race Relations, said the government was making some concessions to "legal" blacks in urban areas, while putting more effective vetoes on newcomers who flock to the cities seeking work. He said there were increasing reports of hunger and want coming from the remote rural areas where blacks have been resettled.

The Voice, an ecumenical weekly, reported that stepped-up pass raids have occurred in urban areas all over the country. Hundreds of people looking for work have been caught in pass raids. In some instances, women who leave the segregated townships to shop in the cities have been arrested.

FLUOR SETS SYN—FUEL AGREEMENT

South Africa has moved a step closer to marketing its oil-from-coal technology in the U.S. The Fluor Corporation, a California-based condtruction giant, and SASOL, the South African govern-owned producer of synthetic fuels, have announced an agreement covering future use of SASOL's technology in this country.

"Under terms of the agreement," an announcement by both companies states, "Fluor and SASOL will jointly perform overall consulting services and feasibility studies, will prepare basic design packages for potential users, and will provide such other technical services as required during the engineering construction, and initial operation of the facilities."

The U.S. company most actively considering construction of a SASOL-type facility is Texas Eastern, a Houston-based gas distribution firm. Earlier this year, financial and other complications caused Texas Eastern to shelve its plans to use SASOL technology in a proposed synthetic gas plant in New Mexico.

Texas Eastern is now interested in building a plant which would produce "transportation fuels" from coal. And officials from the company and from SASOL have confirmed that talks are currently under way.

Syn-fuel proponents are hopeful that Congress will soon adopt legislation that would provide Federal financial backing for private firms entering into production. But an agreement reached earlier this year between the State Department and the Department of Energy places limits on the use of Federal funds for purchase of SASOL technology.

According to Energy officials, the term of the Fluor-SASOL agreement, as stated in the joint release, exceed those limits. "If there were to be a government-sponsored demonstration plant, or government assistance for a private undertaking, SASOL could not particpate," one official states.

Fluor and Texas Eastern officials refuse to say whether the Federal guidelines interfere with their plans. But U.S. officials believe that Fluor, which has lobbied SASOL's cause before might take up the issue in Washington again if the state Energy arrangments creates problems.

The state Department does not want to see the U.S. become dependent on South African energy technology at a time when the Carter administration is trying to distance itself from that country's racial policies. Other critics oppose syn-fuel production for environmental reasons.

For its part, Fluor argues that its agreement with SASOL is a "significant contribution to the development of the U.S. synthetic light fuels program and in the reduction in the nation's reliance on imported crude oil."

The agreement is an outgrowth of Fluor's already-close working relationship with SASOL-a $4.9 billion contract to build the mammoth SASOL II coal conversion plant and its adjacent extension, SASOL III.

To demonstrate the worth of those projects, Fluor has just sponsored a tour of SASOL's facilities for 23 American journalists, including reporters from major trade publications, who flew out from the U.S., and the South Africa-based correspondents of U.S. news media. The Fluor-SASOL agreement was announced as that visit was concluding.

ZAIRIAN PATCHWORK? After lengthy negotiations, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has signed an agreement to forward Zaire $153 million over the next 18 months. Ealier this year, when Zairian President Mobutu refused to comply with their program of longterm economic reform, the IMF refused to sign the agreement.

With Zaire's debts now soaring above $3.5 million, experts question whether the loan will make much difference.

HOT WATERS• According to the Washington Post and New York Times a naval confrontation was brewing off the north African coast in August, but U.S. officials claim the press reports totally baseless.

A Post article last month said that the Carter administration had decided to challenge other nations' claims to water and airspace beyond three miles from their shores, and one of the first tests of the new policy was to be a show of force off the Libyan coast by the U.S. Sixth Fleet.

The Post story followed an earlier similar story by the N.Y. Times and even quoted a cable by Atlantic Commander Harry Train about "planned exercises, transits and overflights by naval and air forces for the purposes of asserting U.S. rights in the face of excessive claims."

But a State Department official informed Africa News that both stories were inaccurate and that the Libyans, after filing quiet protests in each instance, were assured that the U.S. has no intention of challenging the offshore claims of Libya or any other nation. The State Department maintains that any disputes concerning territorial claims should be dealt with in the Law of the Sea Conference, where the Libyans have been acting, according to the official, "quite responsibly."

U S MATCH FOR SOUTH AFRICANS? Flouting an International Amateur Athletic Union (IAAU) ban on competition with South Africa, the Tidewater, Virginia Karate Club sponsored a match between the South African AAU team and its American counterpart on September 2. The two teams are going on to New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts for additional matches.

Several local groups joined to form a coalition which protested the match. John Dommisse, a spokesman for the coalition, comments, "Karate is a minor sport, but this is part of the South African strategy.They have been banned from major sports, which get a lot of publicity, so they come to the U.S. complete and go back with their green jackets saying, 'We're completed as a team in America.'"

Domminsee contends that Noel Smith of the Tidewater Karate Club has been paid by the South African government to stage the U.S. matches. Smith denies the charge. (AN)

SOWETO OVERTURNS RENT HIKE

JOHANNESBURG Addressing a rally in the African township of Soweto outside Johannesburg last month, Dr. Nthato Motlana, chairman of the unofficial but popular Committee of Ten, presented an ultimatum to the white government: "You put us here so you wouldn't have to see us or smell us," he declared. "You've got to pay for the privilege."

The rally was part of the protest which erupted last month after the West Rand Administration Board (WRAB), the body which runs the region's black townships, had announced plans to raise rents by 100. over the next year.

The government backed down, and on August 31 Prime Minister P.W. Botha made an unprecedented visit to Soweto. Arriving in a military helicopter accompanied by seven cabinet ministers, he toured selected cities and announced cancellation of WRAB's $14 million deficit.

That move could help offset the political damage caused by the controversy, which was particularly embarrassing for black leaders who have cooperated with the government on its plan to electrify Soweto and make other improvements. Soweto Community Council Chairman David Thebahali first endorsed the rent increase, then withdrew his support on the eve of the Committee of Ten's rally. Even so, toddlers marched through the crowd of several hundred at the Orlando YMCA carrying banners reading "Thebahali a sell-out." and speakers from the floor condemned council members for negotiating with the authorities on their behalf.

The Committee of Ten and most Soweto residents boycotted the elections earlier this year in which the Community Council was elected. The government had called the vote, the first in any black township, in an effort to reduce the tensions that have persisted since widespread protests in 1976. Only 6. of the eligible voters turned out.

A city in its own righ• with more than one million inhabitants, Sowetc•'s various neighborhoods stretch for miles on the outskirts of Johannesburg.

At the rally, Motlana recommended that instead of raising rents WRAB should cut its staff, replacing white bureacrats with black who are currently jobless. He also argued that township improvements should be financed from the government's general revenues, which he said are largely the product of black labor.

The Committee of Ten has also announced plans for a weekend conference later this month to discuss the township's problems and to draft specific proposal "on how we intend shaping out future.'

Motlana was one of the three black leaders who convened at the invitation of American civil rights leader Jesse Jackson during his visit to South Africa last month. The meeting was billed as a "unity session," an attempt to oversome differences which have arisen between Johannesburg-based activists and Gatsha Buthelezi, chief minister of the Kwazulu homeland and head of the politcal movement in Inkatha.

In Washington last week, Buthelezi praised Jackson for his efforts and for his stand on South Africa. In an interview with the Voice of America, he also called Botha's visit to Soweto "significant" and praised the Kellogg Company for agreeing to recognize and bargain with a black union at its South African cereal-making subsidiary.

In spite of the unity meeting, differences between Buthelezi and other leaders remain. Many blacks are critical of his willingness to serve in the government-appointed Kwazulu post. And pressure policies is in evidence.

The South African Council of Churches, whose secretary general. Bishop Desmond Tutu, was the third leader at the Jackson-hosted session, adopted a platform in July which amounted to a call for civil disobedience of the country's race laws. And the Committee of Ten has been under fire from Soweto youth for being too moderate in its demands and in the tactics it advocates for bringing about change.

ANGOLA'S TRAGIC LOSS

President Agostinho Neto of Angola, who died of cancer Sept, 10, was one of those remarkable individuals whose lives changed history.

And it was not just the history of Angola, but of Africa as well.

Neto's role as a revolutionary, political and government leader was the product of the class struggle in general and the anti-colonial struggle in particular. But he added a dimension, a unique imprint, that pushed these struggles to the limits possible under concrete circumstances.

A modest and soft – spoken figure he could be exceptionally decisive and strong – willed when occasion demanded, as it often did. A doctor of medicine and an accomplished poet of his people, he was fundamentally a Marxist revolutionary who devoted his adult life to liberation of Angola from 500 years of Portuguese colonialism. His premature death at 56 is a tragic loss to the peoples of Angola, Africa and the world.

Neto assumed command of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) and the armed struggle against the Portuguese in the early 1960s' and remained the leading figure until his death in a Moscow hospital. He managed to navigate the extreme complications caused by uneven levels of developement at some periods within his own organization, fascist rule imposed by Lisbon backed by U.S. imperialism – and the machinations of two rival "liberation" movements which degenerated into neo-colonial puppet fronts.

In unity with fraternal organizations in Mozambique and Guinea Bissau Frelimo and PAIGC – MPLA waged relentless struggle against the Portuguese for 15 years. As a result of these debilitating colonial wars, Portuguese military officers and progressive civilians arose in 1975 to destroy decades of fascist rule inside Portugal and subsequently withdrew from Africa. This stunning victory not only provided independence for Angola and the other Portuguese colonies but infused the continent itself with an aura of liberation and specifically acted to accelerate the struggle for the freedom of Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa. Neto was an instrumental leader throughout this entire process, the full ramifications of which are still developing in all Africa.

This stunning victory not only provided independence for Angola and the other Portuguese colonies but infused the continent itself with an aura of liberation and specifically acted to accelerate the struggle for the freedom of Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa. Neto was an instrumental leader throughout this entire process, the full ramifications of which are still developing in all Africa.

Following the fall of fascism in Lisbon, Neto's leadership shaped the direction of Angola in three important ways:

First, he helped guide the MPLA into power in November 1975 at a time when Angola was under extreme pressure to accept a coalition government including the neo-colonial forces. Then, with the aid of fraternal Cuba, the MPLA defeated puppet armies backed by Zaire and accompanied by a South African invasion force. This victory against the racist forces of Pretoria represented the the first military deteat of South Africa at the hands of black Africans and has had a crucial impact upon the course of the struggle in Africa.

Second, Neto propelled Angola toward the path of socialism when the MPLA was being buffeted by forces to the right and left of the organization which were either demanding concessions to neo-colonialism or advocating that Angola move faster than its objective and subjective conditions could accommodate.

Third, Neto defended Angola's national independence and essentiallly nonaligned foreign policy against all attempts to subordinate the country to this or that sphere of influence, while simultaneously never compromising Angola's staunch stand against imperialism and neo-colonialism.

At this moment of sorrow, the Guardian joins with all progressive peoples in exptesing our profound condolences to the people of Angola for the loss of a leader whose significance transcends national boundaries.

The course ahead will be defficit for Angola without Agostinho Neto, as the Angolan people must realize. ETHIOPIA'S BLACK JEWS

ETHIOPIA In the rugged, isolated villages of Ethiopia live 28,000 black Jews who are being annihilated. They are called Falashas, which means strangers or exiles. They are caught between revolution and civil war.

Hunger, ignorance and disease are rampant in the 490 remote hamlets where the deserted descendents of the First Temple, once numbering one half million proud Ethiopian Jews, are today reduced to a pitiful handful.

The Government of Ethiopia is not to blame for the current tragic situation of thier black Jews, almost half of who are youngsters under the age of 18. The Gundar region where the Falashas live is a stronghold of the rightwing opposition to the Ethiopian Government. The Falashas are exploited by the Aristocratic Christian landowners and, since the military revolution in Ethiopia in 1974 gave the Falashas the right to own land, they are also the victims of farmers who attack their settlements, murder them and flee.

A small number of Falashas have made their way to Isreal. The remaining numbers are being ignored by both Jewry and the rest of the world. They struggle to survive in conditions of destitution and want, eking out an average yearly income of $60. They have no hospitals. There are 1,400 children, 90 percent under the age of 14, who attend 21 schools, only one of which goes past the 8th grade.

While the state of Israel has announced that the Falashas are to receive full rights under the Law of the Return, they are being slaughtered or sold into slavery, over 2,000 are in refugee camps and at least that many reside in famine areas.

The Israelis appear to be ineffective in dealing with the urgent plight of their Falasha brothers. The Israeli Parliament is debating and discussing while their fellow Jews are being destroyed.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin has announced his support in helping the Falashas migrate to Israel. According to The Jerusalem Post, bureaucrats in the Ministry of the Interior and the Jewish Agency are standing in the way of real action.

We cannot sit silently and watch a second Holocaust. The Talmud tells us, "He who saves a single life, it is as though he has saved the entire world." After World War II, the appalled, shocked world swore that a Holocaust would never happen again. Yet it is happening again.

All of us who proclaim the sanctity of human rights, who believe that we are our brothers' keepers, ought to mount a mass campaign to replace today's feeble gestures with meaningful action before the remaining Falashas are wiped out.

HEROIN AND THE UNITED STATES

James Lewis, Jr

HEROIN AND THE UNITED STATES. The problem with heroin in the United States is an old problem which goes back to the 1930s' and other places. French and British freighters ships and planes were being siezed in the 1940s' carrying heroin, opium, cocaine, maijuana, and other drugs.

At the time, the United States had just become the number one power in the world. America came out of WW II with fewer damages than most of the other European, Asian and African nations comparatively. The U.S. mainland was never invaded.

Britan, on the otherhand, could no longer police and sustain its world community economically and militarily. The same was true to a lesser degree with France

After WW II the United States started the cold war, and began to invest in foreign countries where other European countries had control before WW II.

Actually, Britan had already been involved in Opium trade for centuries from India by way of the 'Oriental Expressed.' Britian began smuggling opiun into China in the early 1800's and China, with Hong Kong full of Opium addicts, forbade the trade. This started the first Opium War (1839-42), in which China lost and was forced to open five ports to British trade and to cede Hong Kong.

'In the second Opium War (1856-1860), the British and French joined forces in defeating the Chinese and forced the ports to open and accept their trade from the Yangtze north to Manchuria, according to the Readers Digest Almanac, 1979.

One example of the increasing world influence of the U.S., was the U.S. involvement with Greece and Turkey. On March 12, 1947, president Truman gave his make the world safe for democracy', speech. Later Truman asked Congress for $400 million to provide military and economic assistance to the governments of Greece and Turkey. But, he had already sent troops into Greece in the last five months of 1947, Washington sent hundreds of military advisors and 74,000 tons of military supplies to Greece, including artilery, dive bombers and napalm. American military trained, funded, and armed the Greek national Army of 132,00 men. It was a similar situation in Turkey but Turkey was also used in stragegic defense for the Soviet Union.

During the late 1940s' there were many seizures of French and British ships and planes comming from Turkey with Heroin. Dick Gregory on his album "The Best of Dick Gregory" states that the heroin comes from Turkey into Paris, France, where it is cured, into Canada and then into the United States. One kilo of heroin leaves Turkey costing $16, and by the time it reaches the U.S., it is worth $10 million in street value."

Statistics conflict over the amount of heroin addicts in the U.S. On the ABC 11:00p.m. news it was reported in February 1978, that there were four million heroin addicts in the Unites States, a new record high. Present official statistics say that there are "as many as 100,000 heroin addicts in the city (New York City) and 450,000 in the country," according to Selwyn Raab of the New York Times, September 14, 1979.

One of the problems with keeping accurate statistics on heroin addicts is that heroin is a synthetic dirivative from opium and chemist are making other dirivatives of opium just as addictive as heroin and very similar in symptoms.

Its very hard for the present structure of the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Food and Drug Administration to effectively erradicate this problem.

According to the report titled "Drug Enforcement" by the Drug Enforcement Administration and the U.S. Department of Justice, "If someone wants to control a drug, or have it outlawed, the DEA will enter into discussions with the party or parties requesting a hearing in an attempt to narrow the issues of litigation. A hearing will then be held before an Administrative Law Judge appointed by the Civil Service Commission he will take evidence on Factural issues and hear arguments on legal questions regarding the control of the drug."

The Administrative Law Judge, at the close of findings of fact and conclusions of law which are submitted to the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration."

"The Administrator will review these documents as well as the underlying material, and prepare his own findings of fact and conclusions of law which may or may not be the same as those drafted by the Adminstrative Law Judge."

"He then publishes a final order in the Federal Register either imposing controls or declining to do so."

Starting in the fifties with President Eisenhower, the U.S. got increasingly involved in Indo-China, later to be known as Vietnam. "In 1951 the U.S. Ambassador to France, David Bruce told a Senate Committee that "If Indo China went, the fall of Burma and the fall of Thailand would be absolutly inevitable. The rice exports of Burma and Thailand are criticly important to Malaya, Ceylon,"according to Lawrence S. Wittner in "Cold War America." "The U.S. planes intensified there massive bombing raids over reple held territory, while CIA directed ground operations and funded a covert army of 36,000 Meo tribesmen," i.e. Wittner.

Ninety percent of the illegal heroin now circulating in the world comes from a place on the common borders of Laos, Thailand and Burma called the Golden Triangle in Southeast Asia near Vietnam. According to Peter C. Stuart of the Christian Science Monitor "This is the so-called "Golden Triangle" where the borders of Thailand, Burma asnd Laos converge and an estimated 90 percent of the worlds heroin originates."

According to Peter Stuart "Despite crash programs by the United Nations and the Thai Government, Opium production in this area has trippled since 1970 to an estimated 800 to 1000 tons per year. When refined into heroin, a single pound is enough for 10,000 injections."

"One of the hard problems in persuading tribesmen to switch crops is that growing opium can be lucrative, a good harvest may earn a family as much as $500 a year – nearly twice the annual income of most of the country's farmers."

The United Nations is making some effort to deal with the problem. According to Thomas Land of the Christian Science Moniter "Last year more than 13,750 acres of Burmese poppy fields have been put into alternative crops, such as rice and wheat, reducing the illicit national opium crop by 35 tons according to the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization.

ETHNIC MENTAL HEALTH FOCUS

Northampton, MA - The Smith College School for Social Work as been awarded $206,000 for the first year of a five-year project to enable the School's Master of Social Work training program to better address and meet the needs of ethnic minorities in mental health services, both as social work professionals and as clients.

The project, entitled "Ethnic Minority Manpower Development Community Mental Health Focus," is slated for over-all funding of just under a million dollars over its five-year span by the National Institute of Mental Health of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Dorcas Bowles, project director, said today that "we proposed this program as a response to the nationally-recognized need for more clinical social workers of ethnic minority backgrounds, as well as for provision of better-informed and more sensitive training and service by social workers in general to clients of minority backgrounds."

Ms. Bowles, director of admissions and associate professor in the area of treatment methods at the Smith College School for Social Work, brings to the task a distinguished background in social work, education, and research concerned with children, students, and families of ethnic minority backgrounds.

The project was launched recently with the public sharing of experiences between a black and a white faculty member, Mrs. Bowles, who is black, and Carolyn Saari, another School for Social Work faculty member who is white, in a dialogue entitled "Growing Up in Alabama: Reflections on the 50's." The climate for greater inter-ethnic communication thus established, the school has embarked upon a major recruitment effort to substantially increase the enrollment of students from minority background in this master of social work program.

A special recruitment director will direct the work of a network of geographically dispersed alumni recruiters. This recruitment effort is further buttressed by the availability of full financial aid for about 24 students over the project's duration, as well as by a concerted effort on the part of the school as a whole to provide a highly responsive environment to minority students.

A minority support services co-ordinator will have responsibility for fostering and maintaining such an environment. An ethnic specialist will take leadership in engaging faculty and students in on-going exploration of ethnicity-related questions and integration of relevant issues and knowledge into the existing curriculum. This specialist will also teach a new "Theoretical Issue in Ethnicity" course, as well as monitor and advise students whose field work presents them with ethnicity-related challenges.

The Smith College School for Social Work is located on the campus of College in Northampton, Massachusetts. Its M.S.W. program prepares clinical social workers for direct service to individuals, couples, families, and groups, and well as for career evolution towards planning, advocacy, and administration in community memtal health settings.

The program consists of carefully devised, sequential intervals of summer academic study and long period of supervised field practice in one of the 70 affiliated training centers, dispersed in major cities throughout the country.

RADIATION EFFECTS

Moloney, Professor emeritus of medicine at Harvard Medical School and director emeritus of the hematology devision, Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Boston, will be the first speaker in a series of colloquia on the etiology of cancer being jointly sponsored by the Massachusetts division of the American Cancer Society and the Smith department of the biological sciences.

Moloney will speak on "Experience with Delayed Radiation Effects in Japan and the Marshall Islands" Friday, September 28, at 4:30p.m. in McConnell Hall, Room B 05, at Smith.

Moloney, who was educated at Tufts University and Tufts Medical School also taught there for many number of years. He served as deputy director for research of the Atomic Bomb Casuality Commission in Hiroshima, Japan. He joined the faculty of the Harvard Medical School in 1966 and taught there until his retirement in 1974.

He has written widely on leukemia and other forms of cancer and also has been special consultant to the National Institutes of Health, National Cancer Institute, Bethesda, Maryland. He has been on the staff of several hospitals in the Boston area including Boston City Hospital, West Roxbury Veterans Hospital, and Carney Hospital.

COLD TELESCOPES

Northampton, MA - Judith L. Pipher, associate professor of astronomy at the University of Rochester, will talk about "Cold Telescopes, Warm Bodies: Infrared Astronomy from Space," at a lecture Thursday, September 27, at 8 p.m. in Seelye 10.

Ms. Pipher, who was educated at the University of Toronto and Cornell University, has been a prolific contributor to the literature on infrared astronomy, and currently serves the astronomical community as a member of the user advisory committee at Kitt Peak National Observatory and as a member of the optical)infrared subgroup of the astronomy advisory committee to the National Science Foundation.

Infrared radiation is what is commonly experienced as heat radiation, like the warmth one feels from a fire partway across a room. Thus, infrared astronomers, who are studying warm objects in space, are hampered by the fact that the very telescopes used for the observations are also warm and contribute as much or more to the observed signs than do the celestial sources.

The idea underlying Ms. Pipher's choice of title is that cooling the telescope provides a significant advantage to the infrared astronomer.

In her lecture which will be directed to a general audience, Ms. Pipher will talk about about the nature of objects studied by infrared astronomers, the techniques they use, and the prospects for new discoveries in the next few years as the space shuttle makes possible the regular use of coded infrared telescopes above the earth's atmosphere. The lecture will be open free to the public.

Fonda-Hayden license upheld

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night decided against revoking a UMass Sunday entertainment license for a speaking engagement by Jane Fonda and Thomas Hayden, scheduled for Sunday in Curry Hicks Cage.

UMass Veterans Service Organization members appeared before the board asking that the license be revoked.

The veterans said in a press release the presence of Fonda and Hayden is not "in the best interest of the psychological and social integration of Vietnam veterans into society." They said they strongly oppose Fonda and Hayden's visit because they doubt their credibility to express all facets of the war, especially relating to the agony of combat experiences.

Fonda and Hayden are scheduled to speak for 30 minutes each on solar power, rent control, tax reform and anti-nuclear issues.

"We are not trying to suprress freedom of speech," organization president, Joseph Collins, told the board. "We are trying to emphasize problems which surround vets. I hope sincerely that you'll understand these problems," he said.

The veterans were asking the selectmen to reconsider the issuance of a Sunday entertainment license granted for the speakers last week by the selectmen.

Selectman Donald Routh and Diana Romer said they were strongly opposed to revoking the license.

"I think it is inappropriate to even have this hearing," Routh said. "I am not in favor of reconsideration."

"I think the issue is freedom of speech," Romer said.

Also present at the meeting was Howard Goldman, vice-chairman of the Distinguished Visitors Program, the student-run organization sponsoring the event.

"The license should not be rescinded," Goldman said. "Fonda and Hayden are talking about rent control and other issues, not about Vietnam. The veterans haven't even come to us and talked about it," he said.

The DVP normally does not charge admission to its events. However it will charge a $1

Low sales may force Ticketron off-campus

By STEVE WHITE
Collegian Staff

Ticketron, the computerized ticket service in the Campus Center, may move off campus because ticket sales are too low, said Steve Lepow, general manager of the Travel Center and Ticketron offices.

Ticketron requires its outlets to sell an average of 500 tickets weekly, and according to Ticketron officials, the Campus Center office was selling an average of 250 to 300 weekly, Lepow said. A Ticketron representative informed Lepow the ticket machine would be moved to an in-town location.

Lepow said he was surprised to hear this because he had never been warned before ticket sales were low. Lepow was also told the UMass ticket office was not accessable enough to town residents. Because the office is along the flow of traffic through the Campus Center and is close to the garage, Lepow "finds it hard to believe that the office is inaccessable," he said.

Lepow said that before any action is taken, Ticketron officials will talk with him futher on the issue. He said he hopes to keep the Ticketron office in the Campus Center for a trial period based on this week's sales. Lepow cited sales figures of 480 tickets sold the first week of September, from 700 to 800 sold the second week and an expected total of about 1,500 tickets last week. He said 800 Grateful Dead tickets were sold in just one day last week.

Lepow said Ticketron is a nationwide company, divided into districts which function as separate operation. From the Campus Center, he said, tickets are sold to events as far west as Ohio and as far south as Virginia.

To obtain tickets, Ticketron has contracts with concert promoters, and with places such as the Springfield Civic Center and Boston Garden, Lepow said. He said each Ticketron outlet has a Box Office Machine, a computer that sells tickets on first come, first serve basis.

Dana Cohen and Charlie Barry seek contributions for multiple sclerosis yesterday on the Campus Center concourse. They also sought dancers for a Dance Marathon for Multiple Sclerosis, to be held Oct. 12 through 14, sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha, a fraternity. (Staff photo by Peter Lee)

Campus assault: one woman tells story

Editors Note: This is an actual account of a sexual assault. Names and places have been changed to protect the victim.

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Over 50 percent of UMass women did not report violent crimes committed against them to the police, in 1979, according to a survey by the campus Committee to Study Violence Against Women.

UMass transfer student Alice Smith, attacked near her home is one woman who did press charges against her assailant.

In the mid-afternoon, nearly one and a half years ago, Smith felt someone grab her hand, and she could not pull away. Suddenly, the assailant put his arms around Alice, produced a knife hidden in his coat and pressed the blade against her stomach.

"Want me to cut your throat?" he whispered.

"I was numb and afraid," Smith said. "He had a good grip so I was afraid to break away. He started telling me I was pretty, then kissing and hugging me. He started messing up my hair and I just wanted him to get away from me."

After a few minutes of walking down the street, the attacker was distracted and loosened his grip. Alice took full advantage, running off and hiding behind the deli counter of a nearby store.

A man in plain clothes walked in the deli and approached Alice, telling her he was a policeman who had been watching her attacker. He said the man had earlier tried to steal a lady's purse. The said-police officer, however, was misled by the kissing.

"No," Alice said. "he's not my boyfriend!"

"The police officer called for a paddywagon then, started walking me to school. I was terribly thankful, too upset to trust anyone but a policeman," she explains.

The two passed the assailant standing in a doorway, apparently waiting.

"When we were almost at school, the policeman told me to go on to school and that he'd keep an eye on the man. After a few minutes I heard running behind me and the guy who'd attacked me grabbed me again and said 'Where do you think you're going? Why did you do that to me? That wasn't nice.'"

Horrified, Alice who was travelling on a sidewalk, ran into the street. "At the time, I didn't even think of screaming," she said. "I figured running into the middle of the road and getting hit by a car was my best bet."

At the same time, the man who had called for a paddywagon was running toward Smith and the assailant. He separated the two, and uniformed police were at the scene instantly. The rescuer disappeared and later police told Smith he was not an officer, but a good samaritin.

The attacker was hauled away screaming, "Whore! Liar!" and "she tried to pick me up!"

"A few days later the police asked if I'd go to court and identify the man who'd attacked me. It was a big decision," Smith said. "I wanted to pretend it never happened, I never wanted to see him."

At the police station, Alice learned the assailant, Bob Blake was wanted in Florida for armed robbery and jumping bail and wanted in Massachusetts for attacking another young woman and three young children.

She also found out he had been carrying a foot-long knife the day he attacked her and numerous chains and belts.

After three trips to court, Smith's case was heard, during which she learned that one of the four counts of attempted kidnapping charged against Blake had been dropped. He had attacked another young woman, but she was not present as a witness because the District Attorney had failed to notify her of the hearings so her charges were dropped.

"I flew out of my chair," Smith said. "I wanted to tell the DA that he couldn't do that (drop a charge). My father grabbed me and plunked me down on my chair. Later they told me that it's the way things are done."

Then Smith took the stand.

"I told my story and the case was continued. It almost seemed as if they were waiting for me to drop the charges or to make sure it really happened," she said.

Blake was sentenced to 30 days observation in a hospital for the criminally insane, after which time he was sentenced to another 30 days. "In a big long report he was judged potentially dangerous but not insane," Smith said. After his second term, Blake went before the Judge again.

On her next court appearance, Smith answered such questions as "Where were you going and what were you doing?"

"I was asked if I'd made eyes at him to attract his attention of if I'd winked at him," Smith said. After replying "no," she was questioned about the knife. Had she seen it?

"I wanted to say yes, because the police had told me to say that I'd seen the knife even though I hadn't. I knew that he'd had it, I felt it in my stomach. But I had to answer 'no' I hadn't seen the knife," Alice said.

"They didn't even use the six leather belts and the dog chains as evidence, they told me they couldn't because it's

Man convicted of raping wife

SALEM (AP) – An estranged husband believed to be the first man ever convicted of raping his wife in Massachusetts has drawn a three-to-fiveyear sentence in the state's maximum security prison.

James Chretien, 32, of Lawrence wiped his eyes as Judge Thomas R. Morse Jr. imposed the sentence yesterday in Essex Superior Court.

The verdict last Friday is believed to be the first time a man has been convicted in Massachusetts of raping his wife, according to the office of Essex District Attorney Kevin Burke.

Besides the sentence in Walpole state prison, Chretien was also given three years probation on a separate conviction for burglary with intent to commit assault.

Chretien and his wife, Carmellina, were living apart when the attack occurred. She testified that he entered her Haverhill apartment twice in one night in February.

130 nuke protesters arraigned

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (AP) – Prosecutors grappled yesterday with the task of processing and arraigning 130 demonstrators arrested during an attempt to blockade the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant.

Many of the demonstrators refused to give their names and refused to voluntarily accompany police to Vermont District Court in Brattleboro.

The protesters, arrested while trying to blockade the gates at the Vernon plant, had been taken to Westminster Armory after they refused to cooperate with officials Sunday night.

Thirty seven others were arrested, given citations and released.

Police and prosecutors were clearly caught off guard by the size of the demonstration and the participants' unwillingness to give names or follow instructions.

Many spent the night sleeping on the armory floor as the state was unable to provide bedding until 4:00 a.m.

Officials spent the morning trying to determine how best to arraign them, finally deciding to bring groups of 12 to the courthouse, located 20 miles away.

State debates car insurance and effects of drinking age

BOSTON (AP) – Legislators claimed yesterday that because of climbing gasoline prices and the recently-raised Massachusetts drinking age, the state should hold the line on car insurance premiums.

But industry officials, hoping to win permission for a 21 percent rate hike next year, said the factors cited by the lawmakers would do little to reduce accidents or cut their costs. They said they need $142 million in additional premiums to keep pace with inflation.

The two factions traded their arguments at the opening of hearings on 1980 rates being conducted by state Insurance Commissioner Michael J. Sabbagh. The commissioner, who will decide the rates, has been advised by his own staff to grant only a five percent increase, worth about $34.5 million.

However, the co-chairmen of the Legislature's Insurance Committee – Sen. Allan R. McKinnon and Rep. Raymond L. LaFontaine – said they saw no need for any increase at all.

McKinnon, D-Weymouth, noted that all parties agree the gasoline situation will continue to discourage driving next year, and fewer accidents will occur. However, the industry's estimate of the savings it will enjoy from this phenomenon – $14 million – is far too low, McKinnon argued. Without venturing a precise figure, he predicted the saving will be several times that amount.

LaFontaine, D-Gardner, said he expects gasoline prices to hit $1.50 a gallon next summer, which would cut traffic even more than the price hikes this past summer.

Both legislators cited the change in the state's legal drinking age – from 18 to 20 – as another factor that would reduce accidents and save money for the insurance firms.

LaFontaine claimed that not only would the number of accidents decline, but the average crash would become less severe, since collisions not related to alcohol usually occur at lower speeds.

All of these arguments were labeled overly optimistic by Acheson H. Callaghan Jr., an attorney representing the insurance industry.

He said it is wrong to assume that because people are buying less gas fewer accidents will occur. And he said there may be counter-trends, such as more people driving compact cars, which are more easily damaged in accidents.

As for the change in drinking age, Callaghan said it may reduce highway fatalities.

"But tragic as such accidents are, they constitute a tiny fraction of 1 percent of all accidents," he added. Eliminating those will do little to cut insurance costs, he said.

State police carry an anti-nuclear demonstrator into Distrcit Court yesterday afternoon for arraignment. Many of the 130 protestors arrested Sunday at the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant refused to cooperate, slowing down court proceedings. (AP Laserphoto)

Four hurt in weekend accidents

Three people were injured Friday at the intersection of North Pleasant Stregt and Hobart Lane in front of Puffton Village.

A car driven by Thomas R. Tudryn, 25, of Hadley, was travelling north on North Pleasant Street, and struck a second vehicle, driven by UMass student Thomas E. Martin, which was entering Hobart Lane.

Two passengers in Tudryn's car, Michael J. Cohen, 22, of Gilbraith Manor, and Peggy Corriveau, 18, of Townhouse Apartments, were also injured. Tudryn and Corriveau were treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital. Cohen was admitted with multiple lacerations, and is in satisfactory condition.

Tudryn was given a citation for operating under the influence and operating to endanger.

Saturday, a UMass student was injured in a collision at the intersection of Snell Street and Northampton Road (Rt. 9).

UMass student Cynthia I. Coughlin, 19, of Melville dorm, was treated for minor injuries and released from the University Health Center after the car in which she was riding, driven by UMass student Michael K. Reardon, 21, of North Attleboro, collided with another car, driven by Demetrius E. Moyston, 21, of Burlington, in the intersection.

Under a comforting, dazzling, solar-lit sky, 200,000 people gathered Sunday in Battery Park, New York City for the nation's largest anti-nuclear rally ever.

While the New Englanders, young and old, flocked to the landfill along Hudson Bay to hear the tunes of Pete Seeger, Gil Scott Heron, Jesse Colin Young, Bonnie Raitt and Jackson Browne, they came as well to hear an impressive array of speakers.

Although one denim-clad young man was overheard saying, "Let's get the tunes cooking," the crowd's attitude nevertheless seemed to be one of glowing concern about the potential danger of nuclear power. Flyers explaining such dangers circulated throughout the tranquil, inquisitive crowd, during the seven-hour rally.

About 250 local persons, half of them from UMass, were among the crowd that heard the anti-nuclear speeches of consumer advocate Ralph Nader, political activists Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden, former New York Congresswoman Bella Abzug and Grey Panthers founder Maggie Kuhn, according to a MassPIRG spokesman.

MassPIRG campus organizer John Pepi said five busloads from the Western Massachusetts area attended the rally, as did approximately a thousand people from the Boston area. Many no-nukers drove down in cars as well, he said.

MassPIRG, an eight-year-old public interest research group with 13 statewide chapters, began organizing transportation and publicity for the rally about two weeks ago, Pepi said.

"It's impressive that in two weeks, people could pull together an event that went so smoothly, so successfully," said MassPIRG energy advocate Malcolm Quint of the rally. "That's significant because we were organizing on a local level--you don't have any national organization against nuclear power so you've got to depend on local groups. But you've got the potency there (in local organizations)."

The Sept. 23 Committee, consisting if regional environmental, public interest and citizen action groups, organized the rally. The event was sponsored by the Musicians United for Safe Energy, a non-profit foundation that plans to distribute funds to anti-nuclear groups around the country. The rally culminated a week of benefit concerts also sponsored by MUSE, before packed houses in Madison Square Garden each of four previous nights.

Of the musicians who sang original anti-nuclear messages as well as their more familiar tunes, Quint said, "The level of participation by the musicians was incredible. Musicians are now saying they have power to shape media. Musicians are saying they have power and responsibility over themselves."

The speakers, others agreed, were equally powerful with their medium. "Two-hundred thousand people are here," Nader told the crowd, "but Westinghouse, General Electric and Con-Edison are not here. They're affecting all of you. It is they who are building up the nuclear energy industry. It is they who are producing radioactive materials that could destroy a city, that could produce cancer, luekemia and birth defects."

"Nuclear power represents three percent of total energy companies. We waste 50 percent of our (natural) energy with autos, oil and these buildings are built," Nader said, pointing to the Manhatten skyline. "We have to ... take this three percent from the 50 percent that is wasted."

Pointing to the brilliant sun, Nader told the crowd there is "the alternative...which Exxon doesn't like because it's free."

"Two hundred thousand people, determined, alone can stop the nuclear industry," Nader said.

Knapp, Belloti join forces to solve library problem

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

UMass President David C. Knapp and Attorney General Francis X. Belloti agreed at a meeting between the two last Friday to "work together to solve the University's crippling construction problem."

Knapp, who only last week told the UMass faculty senate that "some form of state government" was to "blame" for the library situation, cited "specific problems that had to be dealt with at the meeting," according to a spokesman in Knapp's Boston office. The source also said that "no decision on the library can be made until various engineering test results are complete."

The spokesman was not sure when this would be. No other meetings are scheduled in the near future.

"I can't discuss anything else at this time in relation to other constructional problems on campus concerning details on the library," the spokesman said.

'Da' relives father-son memories

Jack Aranson as Da

By MICHAEL MARTINEAU
Collegian Staff

The happiness and heartbreak of father-son relationships has rarely been more warmly and tenderly treated than in Hugh Leonard's Tony Award-winning play "Da," presented at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Sunday night.

"Da" is a memory play. Charlie Tynan (Ian Stuart) returns to Ireland to bury his father and upon his arrival, becomes haunted by the spirit of his father, "Da." The play is an irresistable structure of constant flashbacks and present scenes as Charlie remembers the stages of his life. Leonard not only allows Charlie to witness and reminisce about years past, but in several scenes Charlie and his father's spirit engage in lively debate over the many instances during which they disagreed. The playwright gives his characters an opportunity to exercise hindsight in a way we all might like to do.

Many scenes involve the older, mature Charlie seeing a memory re-enacted by an actor playing Charlie's younger self (Curtis J. Armstrong). Another delightful aspect of "Da" is that the older Charlie is allowed to enter these scenarios and give his young alter-ego encouragement and criticism, and on occasion, teases him rather harshly. Not that the younger Charlie does not get this licks in, by any means.

On seeing what he will become at 40 years old, young Charlie sardonically expresses his disappointment with his older half for not making more of himself. Here lies one of the play's few structural flaws. It could be argued that the conflict between the two Charlies is too sharp since they are the same person. However, some of the play's tenderest moments were when old Charlie sadly relives opportunities which he let slip by.

The core of the play is Charlie's relationship with Da. Da is hot-tempered, an embarrassment and a delight at the same time, and although Charlie never admits it, the memory of Da will follow him for the rest of his life. When the curtain falls, Charlie runs from Da and locks doors behind him while his father, — a spirit — calmly walks around the scenery.

Jack Aranson, as Da, was the perfect embodiment of the old codger. His portrayal left no doubt as to why Da was continually haunting Charlie. Aranson's Da was moving and exasperating — a winner. But, with several of the other roles, adjusting my new england ear to his Irish brougue was difficult and, in one particular scene in which Da was angrily ranting, it was difficult to understand.

Ian Stuart, as old Charlie, made us feel his frustration vividly at being unable to really express his affection for Da, and was wonderfully funny looking back at his youth. Charlie was a man trapped by memories made tangible for us.

Young Charlie's role was no easy task, reaching from his teens into his thirties. But it was handled with professional ease.

the remainder of the cast adeptly created the rest of Charlie Tynan's life. Particularly outstanding were Kevin O'Leary, as Charlie's first boss, Cynthia Carle, as Charlie's first love and Virginia Mattis, as Charlie's mother.

"Da" gave the audience a rare opportunity to examine a lifelong father-son relationship. It was warm, funny, sad, and moving, and revealed a part of each of us. and, when all is said and done, that is what good theater should accomplish.

WSYL correction

Quotes by Mark Steenbarger, general manager of WSYL, a Sylvan Residential Area-based radio station were paraphrased incorrectly in the September 24 issue of the Collegian. Steenbarger said he did not mean to imply that WSYL wants to compete with WMUA as a news and public affairs station.

Rather, he said, WSYL strives to provide a progressive rock format as well as public service announcements. Steenbarger said WMUA excels as a public affairs and news station and WSYL as a music station, specifically progressive rock music.

Soviet troops are 'problem, not threat'

BOSTON (AP) — U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown said yesterday that the presence of Soviet troops in Cuba is a political problem, but not a military threat to the United States.

And he stressed that the politics involved should not be allowed to obscure the need for ratification of the SALT II agreement with Soviet Union.

Endorsing arms limitations, despite the Soviet presence in Cuba, Brown told the World Affairs Council of Boston that the Soviet combat troops in Cuba — reportedly 2,500 to 3,000 in number — are far fewer than the 20,000 in 1962 at the height of the Cuban missle crisis.

The Soviet combat brigate, said Brown, is "a severe political problem" for Soviet-U.S. relations.

Because they lack airlift capacity, the troops represent no military threat, he added. "But that doesn't make it less a political challenge," he said of their presence.

As for SALT II, Brown said, "It will permit all of the action necessary to counter the Soviet threat. Without SALT we would almost certainly need to do more — and spend more — since the challenge we face would be larger in the absence of limits on Soviet actions."

Bitten politician favors dog control

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A pro-dog control politician — bitten on the rear end while campaigning — says he's more worried about stray dogs than crime in the streets.

"I'm not concerned about whether I'll be mugged but whether I'll be bitten," said City Council candidate Peter J. Jurzynski after being treated and released from Mercy Hospital on Sunday for a bite on the buttocks.

Even before being nipped by the pooch, Jurzynski was calling for creation of a city dog pound with a warden, trained staff and fleet of vehicles to transport strays.

"The dogs I'm attacking aren't the ones who have owners," he said. "I do a lot of footwork in my campaign, and I know there are residential sections with packs of wild dogs running in the streets.

"I run a low budget campaign, and it costs me votes if I'm afraid to go into a neighborhood," he added.

Jurzynski said he believes each family should be limited to one dog, which should be carefully supervised.

"They may be man's best friend, but they should be kept under lock and key," he said.

Springfield has a leash law, but recently the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has closed its doors to the large number of strays traditionally brought in by police.

The SPCA was protesting the large number of strays that were being brought in.

admission fee for the Fonda-Hayden appearance, cutting total DVP costs to $2,800. To do this the Undergraduate Student Senate must waive a DVP constitutional clause prohibiting admission fees charged to the undergraduate student body.

Collins noted that the senate still must waive this bylaw tomorrow night.

"The reason we are charging for the event is because if we did not we would use op most of our budget and not be able to bring other speakers here," Goldman said. "We've had vets come up to us in support of the program," he said.

"I think the DVP is out of line when they asked for the permit before the student senate okayed it," Collins said.

Fonda and Hayden's UMass appearance will be one of many included in their nationwide "barnstorming" tour that began Saturday in New York and will run until October 25.

not illegal to carry them. He had heavy dog chains and he didn't even own a dog!" she said.

In his closing statements, Blake's defense argued that his client shouldn't be jailed because no crime was committed to Smith's person.

"He said threats that are not carried out are not a good reason to put a man in prison. He tried to make me look vengeful. He said that putting the man in jail would not help me. I wasn't doing it for revenge," Alice said, "I was doing it to get him off the streets."

Blake was sentenced to four and half years in prison for three counts of attempted kidnapping.

"They told me it would have been more if I'd been cut. I said to the cop, 'You want blood, do you want blood, you mean I'd be better off if I'd been cut?'" Smith said.

"I asked the defense attorney if he had a mother, or a sister or a girlfriend. He told me he was sorry but it was his job. I told him I'd never be as low as he was to accept a job like that," she said.

"Two-and-a-half months later I learned that Blake had gotten a weekend furlough and hadn't returned. I was furious. I wanted to see the person who'd let him out. You always heard that the system stinks — now I knew it was true," Alice said.

"A court psychologist told me that he was given a furlough for good behavior." Smith said, "They told me the jails were overcrowded and furloughs help ease the problem, and are also thought of as rehabilitation."

"I was terrified," she said. "He knew my name and where I lived. I couldn't go back to school. I couldn't even go back to the area. I wanted him to stay in there a few years to at least forget my face."

Smith said she has overcome the experience, but she doesn't go out alone at night and carries a can of mace.

★ Rally

"Nader was great," said Pepi. "So were the other speakers, they came up with specific proposals. After the May 6 rally in Washington, D.C., Carter told them (the speakers), theyshould come back to him with alternatives. (But) Carter didn't come through..."

Others cited Sarah Nelson of the Supporters of Silkwood and the National Organization of Women, for her speech on the collusion between the nuclear energy industry and the United States government. Nelson's speech, in which she discussed Karen Silkwood, an anti-nuclear activist whose supporters claim she was killed in her anti-nuclear efforts, "made one of the best speeches because she gave a lot of information," said UMass transfer student junior Judy Weiss, whose disarmament activist mother Cora, also spoke at the rally.

"Maybe a lot of people came for the music, but when Nelson spoke, she might have turned some heads. Hopefully they (the crowd) was educated. Even if they did come for the music, they might have ended up learning something," Weiss said.

Booters go for repeat of last season

By DAVID BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

When the UMass men's soccer team defeated Boston University, 3-2, in sudden-death double overtime to become last year's ECAC Division 1 Northeast Regional champions, it completed one of - if not the - most successful seasons in the school's history. Now it's time to try to force history to repeat itself.

"Programs he-ya! Getcha' programs! Can't know whose feetcha' watchin' less ya' gotta program!"

Many of the names on this year's program will be the same as last year. Indeed, Coach Russ "Cap" Kidd emphasizes experience as one of the team's strong points. But there will be three names noticeably missing from last year's line-up. The Minutemen will have to vompete without last season's three top goal scorers: co-captain Joel Mascolo (10 goals, 4 assists; graduated 1979), Tasso Koutsoukos (7 goals, 7 assists; signed professional contract), and Antonio G. Dias (6 goals, 2 assists; left UMass early last spring and decided not to return). These starting forwards scored 23 of the teams season total of 39 goals (a UMass single-season record).

Coach Kidd admitted he'd "give my right arm" to have Mascolo back, but said he believes this year's team is as strong all-around as last year's squad (12-5-0), and stronger defensively.

"This is my most experienced group," said Kidd, who is going into his fifth season as UMass mentor. "We have more depth than in the past...and the defense and goal is stronger. This is my best midfield in four years," he added.

Before their opening game against Bridgeport, UMass was ranked as the fifth best team in New England and "just missed" making the top 20 in the national poll, Kidd said. As was the case last year, the University of Connecticut and Brown University are considered to be the class clubs in New England.

On September 11, UMass spent the day at Brown scrimmaging in double sessions. The day's action culminated in a full-scale battle under the lights.

"Cap's" Red Raiders outran Brown to a 4-1 vistory in the aternoon, then lost the nightcap 3-0 on what Kidd described as a "war." "The players got a little rousty...There was a little blood," he said.

The coach said he was happy with the workout and felt his squad played Brown even the entire day.

"We won't face a tougher opponent all season," Kidd said, pointing out the similarities in the two teams style of play - strong and physical. "We didn't do an excellent job down there, but we took it to them with confidence...They didn't score a real clean goal all night."

The men's soccer team will try to repeat last year's successful campaign which saw them post a 12-5-0 record. (Staff photo by Amira Rahman).

This season's varsity roster contains 24 fielders and 3 goalies. Coach Kidd said the number of players traveling with the team could vary, but he generally plans to bring 19 players with him on the road.

"Excuse me, buddy. Do you have a program? Whose in goal for UMass?"

Mark Marilla, a junior from Albany, N.Y. will be the starting keeper for the Minutemen, sharing the duty with sophomores Dave Clark and Matt Esteves. Marilla had an impressive year in '78, averaging 7.4 saves in each of 15 games and collecting 5 of UMass' 6 shutouts. he allowed 15 goals all season.

Playing fullback in front of Marilla will be tri-captians Mike St. Martin and Mark Vassalotti, and senior Greg Omasta. St. Martin, a senior, was voted Most Valuable Player last year by his teamates for his outstanding defensive play.

At midfield, UMass will have three veterans: tri-captain Mark Vasington, sophomore Doug White, and junior Scott Cooper. Vasington was the third leading point getter for the Minutemen last season, tallying 4 goals and 7 assists for 11 points. The 7 assists tied UMass' single-season record. White is a former High Schol All-American from Needham and is the fastest player on this year's team. He scored the winning goal in last year's championship game against B.U. Cooper has also proven himself very versatile, switching from last season's fullback slot.

Another versatile player is Bret Simon, who moved from fullback to the sweeper position this year with little difficulty and much success, Kidd said.

The forward line will consist of senior striker Wayne Moran, sophomore Tony M. Dias, and a number of other forwards including senior John Thomas, senior Ed Eschmann, and freshman Gus Martins. Coach Kidd said the duo of Moran and Dias "just look tremendous," and he expects Eschmann will see a lot of time.

"Hey buddy, is this line-up any good?"

Coach Kidd could not speculate what he season will bring. "I think we have a good club but I just can't be sure," he said.

He feels his team will have to win at least 11 of their 14 regular season games in order to be considered for the NCAA playoffs. "With a 14-game schedule you just have to do it," he said. "...you just have to do it."

JV kickers ready to go

By JAY BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Staff

J.V. soccer will open their season Sept. 26th against an impressive Williams team. The Minutemen come off a fine 1978 season in which they lost two games by one goal. The coach, Ed Niemiec, who was a soccer player for UMass before coaching, is very optimistic about the teams future. Although, the Minutemen lost a promising freshman, Randy Kershner, who will be out for the season with a fractured leg, hopes still run high for the team.

When the soccer team opened practice sessions last week, there were 80 to 100 soccer candidates. At the end of this week coach Russ Kidd and Niemiec will have filled the 45 alloted positions for both varsity and junior varsity.

"The J.V. team, which is essentially freshmen, as a whole, have a good attitude and are willing to learn the finer points of the game," explained Coach Niemiec. "The whole purpose of the J.V. program is to get players the needed experience and improved skills to become varsity caliber. My goal would be to have all my freshmen play varsity."

"The J.V. team is constantly switching around and it is hard to make selections on the first line since the players are still looking for the position best suited for them," said Coach Niemiec. The 1978 team, which finished in third place with a 4-2-1 record, will hopefully make some new improvements this year and come out on top of their division.

Stickwomen strategy: one game at a time

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

This year's 1979 edition of UMass varsity field hockey entertains hopes of matching or improving upon last year's brilliant 15-7-1 (fourth in New England Regionals, fourth nationally) season. And with good reason.

"Last year we were off during the New Englands but we pulled it together for the nationals," surmises head field hockey and lacrosse coach Pam Hixon. Under the capable leadership of Hixon and JV Coach Tami Gannon the Umies took on Westfield last Saturday, away.

The team is in an independent league, with field hockey powers like UConn, Yale, Springfield and Dartmouth on the agenda. The Umies have been ranked fourth and sixth nationally in the coaches poll. They have already competed at Penn State (Sept. 7-9) in the preseason Lady Lion Tournament.

"It is a good sign (the poll). A lot of it was based on last year. As the season approaches we are concentrating on getting our strategies down. We only lost two starters but there are six teams—any one of which could walk away with it," said Coach Hixon.

With two All-American forwards in Laura O'Neil and Judy Strong ("They add a lot to our attack having two players of their caliber.") the team averages about two goals a game. Yes—field hockey is much like soccer there aren't a lot of goals scored. The game is played on turf and the key word here is strategy; both offensive and defensive strategy.

The two All-Americans, along with a strong midfield, defense and goaltending pulled together last year and the Umies shut out eight—count em—eight victims.

The recent ECAC troubles here do not affect the field hockey team, Hixon assures us. "The women's athletics are not affected by the ECAC—we are governed by the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW)".

Her philosophy? Basic preseason conditioning and fundamentals. "It is important just to think of one game at a time. We are out to win and if we get better everyday we're gonna be prepared for anything by the end of the season."

A realist, Pam Hixon realizes that a good seasonal record is a big factor for recruiting. Accepting that, it is easier to understand her when she says, "Basically...it's important for us to win." She wants to keep this program going strongly.

The list of credentials under Hixon's name is seemingly endless. She graduated from Springfield College in 1973 with a bachelor's degree in Physical Education. There she played varsity field hockey, basketball and softball.

Then Hixon earned her Master's Degree in education ('76). While at Springfield she was an assistant field hockey coach and assisted with basketball and softball. She came to UMass in 1977 and was immediately named head lacrosse coach and assistant field hockey mentor.

Wait a second; that is not all. Hixon played for the U.S. field hockey team from 1969-79. "All that is required is a summer tryout," muses Hixon. "Anyone is eligible. It's going to be an olympic sport in the summer games of 1980. As of this summer I am retired, though." In her spare time she enjoys skiing, golf and music. Mostly, though, she enjoys coaching. "I feel like I have the time to be enthusiastic. I enjoy UMass, the kids and the athletes here have just given everything. I enjoy coaching and that is what I want to do right now."

Assistant Coach Tami Gannon is a University of Maryland graduate and played field hockey and lacrosse there. She is currently a graduate student in sports management. She coaches the JV team and assists Coach Hixon with the varsity. "It's nice to have two thoughts," Hixon said.

The team has eight returning seniors. The forwards are capable and led, of course, by Strong and O'Neil. Defensively sound, the Umies goaltending duo of Karen Stifter and Robin Jennings is experienced. New midfield starters Patty Bossio and Sue Caples should lend support with promising freshmen Ro Tudryn and Chris Coughlin.

Here is the roster: Patti Bosso-midfield-junior, Sue Caples-midfield-sophomore, Chris Coughlin-forward-freshman, Corey Crawford-defense-senior, Julie Hall-forward-senior, Robin Jennings-goalie-senior, Sue Cryder-defense-semopr. Karen LaVerdiere-defese-sophomore, Julie McHugh-forward-senior co-captain, Carolyn Murphy-defense-senior, Laura O'Neil-forward-senior co-captain, Karen Stifter-goalie-junior, Judy Strong-forward-sophomore, Ro Tudryn-midfield-freshman, Laura Walsh-forward-senior, Jodie Wickman-defense-senior, managers Mary Beth Murphy and Vickie Lanza.

The team practices daily at NOPE between four and six p.m.

When asked for a prediction on the upcoming season, Coach Hixon reluctantly replied, "I think we worked hard. We concentrated on getting in shape and strategy—both defensive and corner plays. I like to think we have a strong team but our competition is tough, we haven't seen our competition and don't know how we are going to stack up."

And in perfect candor Hixon concludes, "You just can't pick a winner."

Minutemen geared for gridiron action

Offense: Key lies in running attack

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The key to offensive portion of the UMass football effort during the 1979 season is the re-establishment of a running attack that was decimated by graduation following the banner '78 season. Not only are personell like running backs Dennis Dent and Hank Sareault missing, but holes in the offensive line created by the loss of people like center Mike McLaughlin and guard Bruce Kimball have left some gaping holes to be filled.

Luckily for head coach Bob Pickett, senior quarterback Mike McEvilly will return to spearhead the UMass offense after a full year of signal-calling last season. A native of Clinton, Mass., McEvilly is expected to take up a lot of the slack created by the above abscences.

McEvilly will have some veterans to pass to in the persons of tight ends Marty Paglioni and Mike Barbiasz along with senior flanker Kevin O'Connor and split end Mike Newell.

A senior, Paglioni plays an instrumental role in the UMass running and aerial attack. Already this season, Paglioni has proved his worth including several big catches in the loss to Villanova. Yet, the 6'3", 210 lb. Dudley, Mass. native is no slouch when it comes to carrying out a blocking assignment.

At the flanker spot, O'Conner will employ his smooth execution of pass patterns that helped him to 15 completed passes and three touchdowns during '78. Helping O'Conner at flanker will be freshamn Mike Stone who appears ready to assume a full-time role.

Also helping out in the passing department will be sophomore Asa Hilliard who moves over from a running back spot to work at the tight end position

West Springfield native Mike Newell will work from the split end position. Newell saw limited action last season; catching seven McEvilly passes for 64 yards.

In the backfield, senior halfback Cliff Pedrow returns to improve on a seven touchdown-582 yard season when he averaged 4.9 yards per carry. Tipping the scales at 207 lbs., the White Plains, NY native will be looked to to replace the "up the middle" running back that Hank "the Tank" Saraeult took with him when he left. Backing up Pedrow is exciting freshman Gary pearson who's flashy running style (like returning a kickoff for a TD against Maine) may make everone forget about Dennis Dent.

At the fullback spot, senior Brian Heyworth will see fulltime action for the first time after part-time duty last year. Sharing some playing time with Heyworth will be freshman Dan Dawson.

Blowing holes in the line for these runners and protecting McEvilly will be an offensive line that has just one returning starter from last season. Senior left tackle Karl Nyholm will be lending his experience to an otherwise yet to be baptized offensive line. Hailing from Maynard, Mass., the senior tackle played an integral role in last year's 9-4 season with his 6'2", 260 lb. frame.

At left guard, senior Steve Wojes draws the starting assignment. Pickett expects big things from Wojes, saying "He's had a good pre-season and appears ready."

Filling in the shoes of the now departed Mike McLaughlin at center will be junior Fred Read who comes here from West Greenwick, R.I. Sharing some time with Read will be senior Don Sarette.

On the right side of the line, Pickett will be using senior Peter Brown at the right guard position. At 6'3", 240 lbs., Brown will have a tough job on what appears to be the strong side of the line. next to Brown will be sophomore Chris O'Neil who will try to fill the hole at the right tackle spot.

Handling the placekicking for UMass will be Sandro Vitiello who hopes to better his '78 output of 81 points which incuded 16 field goals. The UMass punter will again be Tim Fontaine who also handles the backup QB duties. Fontaine averaged 36.2 yards per kick last season.

Defense: Youth a key to success

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

If you look very closely at the UMass Minutemen football team, it becomes immediately clear that while the offense will play a very big role, it is the defense that will hold the key to any post-season action in 1979.

In 1978, a defense dominated by seniors gave up less than 10 points a game during the regular season and catapulted the Minutemen into the Division 1AA National Championship. Only three starters remain from last year's squad, and in 79, head coach Bob Pickett will have to rely on those veterans and a cast of inexperienced sophomores and juniors to get the job done.

Called the "Scratch Batch" (because of their hustle) by defensive line and linebacker coach Jim Reid, the 79 defense is a young, aggressive group of fine athletes that has virtually unlimited talent. What is lacking in most of these players is that all important game experience.

How quickly these young players can mature and master their positions will determine the success of the team this season.

All in all, the Minutemen will be starting three seniors, four juniors and four sophomores at the defensive positions. On the defensive line, Pickett will start two juniors and three (yes that's right, three) sophomores.

At middle guard, Pickett will start Ray Benoit, one of the three starters returning from last year. Benoit was hurt for much of 78, but still played in five games, and should be the leader on the line this year. Backing up Benoit is All-American heavy-weight wrestler John Allen, a junior who continues to impress his coaches with his prowess.

At the tackle positions Pickett will go with two sophomores, both destined for greatness. At left tackle will be Eric Cregan who filled in for Benoit when he was injured last season and more than held his own.

At right tackle will be Dan Petrie, who Reid calls the "quiet man." "He's quiet, but efficient." said Reid. "He can hold the line like a senior." Freshmen Jim McCoy and Dana Beane, sophomore Dave Burlo and junior Todd Davis are all expected to see some action at the position.

At the left end (strong end) position, the Minutemen will go with George Lewis, the first sophomore ever to start at end for UMass. Reid said Lewis is progressing very well and "has the potential to be an All-American." Sophomore Vic Pizzotti and senior Pete Stevens are both capable backups.

At the "quick end" spot will be promising junior Frank DiTomasso, described by Reid as a "quick, very intense player who never walks." Two budding prospects, sophomore Tom Ahern and freshman Joe Graham will give Pickett a lot of depth at the position.

At the linebacker positions, the Minutemen will rely more on quickness and intelligence than on size.

At right linebacker the starter will be Pete DiTommaso, Frank's younger brother. Although not big for a linebacker (he's 6'1, 200 lbs.) DiTomasso is quick and intelligent and he can play his position. On the left side will be senior Ken Horn, who played on the defensive line last year and did very well. The backups, sophomore Bill Schapanis and Scott Crowell are both excellent athletes and are expected to see a lot of action.

The strongest area on defense for the Minutemen is the secondary, where senior cornerbacks Steve LeMay and Kevin Sullivan will be the anchors.

"LeMay is a definite pro prospect." said Reid. "Steve has just gotten better and better every year, he's the most consistent cornerback we have ever had. He will be the best defensive back ever to graduate from UMass."

At the other corner is team co-captain Sullivan. "Sullivan has good physical skills." said Reid, "No mattter who he goes against he gets the job done."

At the strike position, a spot similar to the "Wolfman" position at Michigan, Pickett will go with junior Toni Jessi, who is new to the position and is developing quickly according to Reid. At the weak safety (whip) position will be junior Bob Manning who has the tough task of filling the shoes of John Beerworth.

New coach Marasco leads women spikers

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Just a touch from the fingers of both hands sends a volleyball upwards, until it nearly hovers above the net. For those few microseconds, the ball stays in position; the player in the forecourt has a chance to drive it into the opposition's midcourt a few feet away. The team members practice the best way to spike -- a sharp, devastatingly straight line. Some spikes float or just bounce softly away. Occasionally, aplayer drives the ball so hard that the sound resembles a cannon; the volleyball's impact send shockwaves felt all along the floor.

Though spiking is a major part of volleyball, spiking is not all volleyball. Learning and refining the skills of setting, digging, serving, and positioning come with the game.

It takes practice, a whole lot of practice. Just ask anyone who plays on the UMass women's volleyball team.

But a whole lot of practice makes volleyball look easy to the spectating eye. Good volleyball also means many victories.

Just ask Elaine Marasco, UMass' new volleyball coach.

Formerly with Yale University, Marasco hopes to make UMass a team of the same claiber as Yale's. After all, she made Yale one of the most respected powers in volleyball in New England and the Northeast in general. She did this feat in just two years.

Now, Marasco coaches a team that last year posted a respectable 20-12-1 record. UMass has many returnees from last year, among them Sally Anderson, Joyce Gresl, Ellen Braun, Donna Sasso, Peggy Barber, and Brenda Simmons.

Unlike many other teams at UMass, their season has already begun. Even before most students returned to campus, some volleyball team members were preparing to meet a unique opponent coming one week after classes would start -- the Warsaw Agricultural and Mining Academy, whose members have played for Poland in European Class Cup action. On tour, representatives from Warsaw Academy contacted UMass, expressing a desire to play UMass.

A fantastic opportunity presented itself; even though the women had a week or two to prepare, they entered NOPE gym that Wednesday night knowing they were ready.

In front of about 400 people -- many seeing the UMass women's volleyball team for the first time Warsaw overpowered UMass in straight games. Despite Warsaw's expertise, UMass showed the crowd signs of their talents, especially when Joyce Gresl served and Brenda Simmons drilled a spike past the Warsaw netminders.

As the phrase goes, it was a sign of things to come.

Last weekend, UMass traveled to Kingston, Rhode Island, for the URI Tournament. Overwhelmed last year by Maryland, UConn, and others, UMass came back to Amherst tied for first in the five-team tourney. Losing only to URI, UMass used a phenomenal serve, good passing, and a progressively improving set to get-past their opponents; UConn and Providence College fell to the Minutewomen for the first time ever in women's volleyball.

Over the course of the season, UMass faces Boston College, who defeated UMass for the State Division I title last year, Springfield College, UConn, Southern Conn., the University of Hartford, Keene State, and Yale.

Elaine Marasco expresed a cautious optimism at the season's beginning. Now, with each game, Marasco is all the more optimistic about the outcome for UMass at season's end.

"Against Warsaw, we were as ready as we would ever be considering the time involved," said Marasco, "and we did very well; the team showed some minor weaknesses that we could stop as the season progresses. With the URI Tournament, UMass played extrememly well; our serving, passing, and setting improved tremendously. As the season goes along, I think UMass will live up to what I believe is their potential, which is almost endless."

Netwomen coach optimistic as season gets underway

By DAVE SIVRET
Collegian Staff

There are two words that describe the '79 women's tennis team situation to a 't'. They are "totally optimistic." Last years team was ranked sixth in New England in the final polls and had an excellant 9-2 record in dual matches. From that very sucessful group only one person was lost through graduation and this year's team has been further strengthened through the addition of several fine first year players.

While I was interviewing the coach a young woman walked up, introduced herself, and told the coach that she was a highly ranked player in New England, that she had been just cut from the field hockey team and would like to try out for the tennis team. all of this does not, I repeat not, add up to anything but a totally optimistic outlook for the upcoming season.

The coach is John Beal. He coached the team in the spring when they competed in a series of informal scrimages. He felt this was very benificial in getting to know not only his team but also the competition. His, and the team's, varsity debut is this Wednesday at Smith. He played tennis for the University of Colorado and has been a teaching pro in the area for 7 years.

"The key to this season is how ell our doubles teams organized. We should be able to win a least half of our singles matches and if we get good solid play out of the doubles crew we should be the, or one of the, teams to beat in New England. We are also a very deep team. We have the ability to move players around without getting hurt. This is a big help in the dual meets," said coach Beal.

At the time of this writing the singles players are set but the doubles selections were still up in the air. The way that coach Beal sets the order of the singles players is through a series of round robin matches in whcih the girl with the best record against her teamates becomes the number 1 singles

JV gridders set for action

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts junior varsity football team tentatively opens its 1979 season October 5th against Milford Academy, in the hopes of improving upon last years 2-3 record.

The team's coaching staff will be comprised of second year graduate assistant Sam Eddy, who will handle the defense, and Jay Kelly, who will work with both Eddy and Telander. At the helm will be Clarence Brooks, now in his fourth season as the UMass general. What is most unusual about the three men that will form the bulk of the staff is that their average age is 24.

The 45 man JV unit has been working for nine days to this point, and Coach Eddy already has some basic ideas on how to structure the '79 campaign.

"We are trying to give these kids a program where they are playing against people their own age, in an attempt to show them a little bit what football is like at UMass. We are not here," Eddy added, "to mold men, but to enjoy ourselves while learning at the same time."

Coach Eddy feels that this year will be an especially challenging one for the JV Minutemen, because of the lack of any returning players from last seasons squad.

"Other teams will bring down a lot of their varsity kids to play us," he says, "and many of them will be sophomores or even juniors. We will be bringing down players from the varsity as well, but they will limited to freshmen."

For Coach Eddy, the '79 season will be an emotion-charged one. "I'm involved in the creation of the whole thing," he says, "so its really exciting for me. Our main objective is to express to the players how it's supposed to be done and let them do it."

Inexperience key to linksters

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

The 1979-80 UMass men's golf team is virtually a different club than the 1978-79 club. Coach Ed Vlach welcomes back only three returning golfers from his squad of a year ago. Senior Mark Duggan, junior Marty Hunt, and sophomore Bob Gladchuck represent the nucleus of the team, and the balance of the collegiate golf experience. Balancing out the club is a welcomed transfer student from Holyoke Community College, Tony Kelley. Kelley adds experience and depth to the Minutemen linksters, but most of all he is another golfer that Vlachcan count on for good consistent golf.

Indeed, Vlach will count on these four for both scoring and leadership, because the rest of his team has little to no collegiate tournament experience. Vlach says it will be one of these golfers who will be elected team captain, after a few weeks of tournament play.

That individual will have some big shoes to fill -- those of last year's captain Jim McDermott who was a great collegiate golfer. McDermott led the Minutemen to the Yankee Conference title in 1977. Another spot that Vlach will have some difficulty filling will be the one vacated by Vic Lahteine who finished second in a national long driving contest last year, and has now turned professional.

Rounding out this year's roster are Rick Goldstein, Joe Tamsey, Bob Robichaud, Steve Auerbach, and freshmen Steve Midttun, and Rich Murphy, along with alternates Brian Golden, and Tom Schneider. Vlach said, "I geel that how well the team will do, depends on how well these first year players perform."

The Minutewomen started their season with a respectable showing in the Eastern Atletic Association Tournament finishing third behind Rutgers and West Virginia in a field of six. The team played well on the first day (Friday) of this tournament despite some adverse weather conditions and found themselves in second-place just four-strokes off the lead after the first-round. But proceeded to lose 26 shots to Rutgers and 13 shots to West Virginia on Saturday to fall back into third place.

The UMass golfers played Monday in the Yankee *Conference Championships at Stowe, Mass. (The results are not known at the time of this writing). Coach Vlach dropped his two highest scorers from the starting roster of the first tourney and will replace them with some of his other golfers according to their practice rounds at Hickory Ridge Country Club. "I will be giving all of the guys on the roster a chance to play," said Vlach of the move.

Looking ahead on the Minutemen schedule, the team travels to Williams College for the New England Championships on September 24-25. Then on September 30th, and October 1st, the Toski International Invitational Tournament will be played on the UMass home course, Hickory Ridge C.C. This is a great opportunity for golf enthusiasts to see some top-rate collegiate golf. Finally, pending the ECAC's decision of course, the Minutemen will travel to Glastonbury, Conn., the site of the ECAC qualifying tournament. The finals for this tournament will be played in Mont Alto, PA.

Women booters look to remain unbeaten

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Somewhere behind all those records from the fall of 1978, behind Pickett's march to Wichita Falls and football's first Pioneer Bowl, Hixon's fine debut as field hockey coach for UMass, (highlighted by a fourth place finish in the Nationals), and the men's soccer team finishing dramatically to win the ECAC title, lies a record seldom touched.

While the titles of news headlines proclaimed Dennis Dent a recordholder for running over 1,000 yards and Tasso Koutsoukos a professional in the NASL, the women's soccer team made its first year as a varsity team one of the most successful for any sport at UMass. Only a 3-3 tie against Brown University spoiled an otherwise perfect record of 14-0-1.

Among the standouts from that first season last year were shutouts of virtually every team playing the former UMass WoSocc Club. Scores of 4-0, 5-0, 2-0, and 6-0 graced the UMass win column, a direct result of the incredible UMass midfield and scorers such as Maddie Magnini, Karen Keough, Sandy Dee and Kelly Tuller. Whenever the opposition managed to get past the midfield and run deep into UMass territory, nearly every attempt to score stopped just short by either Diane Buckhout, the tight goaline defense, or both.

Their final win of the season, against Harvard, gave UMass the honors of being the best team in New England. No playoff system existed for women's soccer, so UMass still retained its number one standing.

This year, women's soccer has a playoff system; the EAIAW Championship will be at Brown on November 10-11.

This year, UMass will try for something else besides just a winning record...

Arnie Morse took over Lou Macedo's postion as coach this year. His job is to "maintain the tempo from last year." According to Morse, that job won't be easy.

"UMass was first in getting good players for women's soccer from the high schools," he said. "Many schools have programs for women's soccer, so some members fo the team have four years of playing experience already. This year, many other teams have gotten really good players who have played in high school; our competition have parity with us now. They'll be trying to shoot us down, because we're the top team."

Helping Coach Morse will be elven returnees, among them Karen Keough,

Swimwomen prepare for a new era

By LAURA FRANK
Collegian Staff

A new era is destined to occur in the history of UMass women's swimming. There has been a large turnover of previous team members, with only nine returning swimmers, twelve very talented recruits, and many walk-ons.

Coach John Nunnelly commented, "We have more depth than ever and therefore will be the most talented swim team in UMass history."

Training has already begun in anticipation of a long season which begins on November 10th against the University of Vermont. Swimming training is rigorous and often boring, cranking out yard after yard.

Head coach Nunnelly has begun the season with an extensive dry land program as well as swimming. This program of calesthenics, flexibility exercises, and running has the aim of building general rather than specific strength as well as endurance.

Seasonally, as the temperature gets colder, the swimmers move inside, with an increase in the amount of swimming. In October, a program begins which focuses more on specific strength necessary for swimming.

As a dry run for their first meet, an inter-squad meet will be held on Oct. 31st.

Coach Nunnelly commented about his expections for the season. "I would like to see best times from everyone. As long as everyone receives the personal fulfillemnt of being a part of the team, I'm sure we will produce positive results."

As a coach, Nunnelly would like to see his team beat the top three, UNH, UCONN, and Springfield College, well developed recruitment programs. "This time the tables will be turned - In our favor!!" Nunnelly exclaimed.

The UMass women's swim team is going to prove to everyone that they certainly, "Do not mess around!!" So, watch out.

Intramurals popularity outshines forfeit fees

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The addition of a ten dollar forfeit fee to touch football entries hasn't touched the popularity of the intramural football program, according to intramural personnel.

"There have even been a couple more entries than last year," Tom Szwak, a graduate student in charge of men's intramural sports, said of the touch football program.

According to Frank Wright, associate director of the intramural program, "the forfeit fee is not designed to punish. We want students to be serious about playing and to show up at schedule times. We don't think it's unreasonable."

Last year, the forfeit fee was required of volleyball and softball entrants. Due to an increase in the forfeit rate, the fee is now required of soccer and basketball as well as touch football, volleyball, and softball entrants.

Also new to the intramural program are three graduate students directing the mens' programs, managing the officials, and taking the official intramural photographs.

Szwak, a graduate of and former varsity baseball player at the University of Notre Dame, will be "coordinating the mens' and the graduate-faculty programs," he said.

"I'll be making sure the games are played, scores are kept, and that the men's figures come in," said Szwak, whose previous intramural experience includes "running the intramural program in my dorm and participating in intramural basketball and softball" while at Notre Dame.

"The intramural program at UMass is vey organized and extensive. It gets a lot of people involved and I'm looking forward to it," Szwak said.

Tom Braun, a graduate of Denison University, has taken charge of officials and supervisors for the IM program.

Braun was involved with holding meetings and screening applications to supply the many officials needed by the IM program. Three officials and one supervisor are needed for each IM football game, and according to Braun, "a lot of applications have been filed," and no shortage is expected.

Taking the official intramural photos will be Mike Chan, a small sport specialist according to Wright. Chan will be organizing IM badmitton, handball, and racquetball, said Wright, in addition to teaching ping-pong and badmitton in the General Physical Education program.

Zulma Garcia and Fian Nooijen, both returning veterans, will again take charge of the women's programs.

Already underway are touch football, field goal kicking, badmitton, and tennis.

Sandy Doo (though she'll only be able to play a few games), and Kelly Tuller (a former midfielder, Tuller will mind the goal this year). UMass' midfield should be as strong as last year; the only probable weak spot lies with goaltending, a spot ably filled by senior Diane Buckhout last year. However, from observations from their practices, UMass will be a tough team to beat.

The Minutewomen enjoy a predominantly home schedule this year; they will host top teams such as Brown, Harvard, and Cortland at the NOPE fields at certain times during the season. Their first game at home will be against Connecticut on Tuesday, September 25.

In the meantime, UMass travels to Plymouth State College for the Plymouth State Tournament on Saturday Sept. 22. They'll play Boston College, New Hampshire, and Plymouth State.

"We should do well," said Morse, "our goal is for the EAIAW's in Brown and to retain our top standing. I guess the only "first" I could be under might be the first loss the team has ever had. I hope I don't get that 'first'."

player, the girl with second best record second and so on.

The singles players and their rand are: Barbara Mills, Sohp., 1st -- Sarah Fryberger, Soph., second -- Cris Carson, Jr., third -- Joanne Vennochi, Jr. fourth -- Beth Goldberg, Fr., fifth -- Lee Robb, Jr., sixth. This is also a team that has something to look forward to with three juniors, two sophomores, and freshman in the top six singles players. Next year, if not this year, could be awesome.

Unfortunately for this fine team, there are also a few other excellent teams in the New England area. There is the ever powerful Harvard. A team from BU on which all of the varsity players are on full scholarships and mostly from the big tennis states like Florida or California where year round tennis is a way of life. Other tough teams are in the region are Brown and Tufts.

The team will play a 13 match regular season at the end of which they will be ranked in a poll. The top teams in this poll will compete in the MAIAW playoffs. The winners of this playoff will procede on to the Easterns and the Nationals, both of which are held in the spring. For a reason unknown to coach Beal he has been told that the team will not be able make the trip to the Easterns even if they are fortunate enough to make it. Hopefully this unfortunate situation will be cleared up by playoff time.

"I don't think there is any team in the area that has as much or more depth that us but unfortunately in the big regional matches it is usually the team that has the good individuals that fare the best. Hopefully we will develop more individual talent as the season progresses," said Coach Beal.

With the blend of youth and talent that this squad has there seems no way that this season can be anything but a total, or close to it, success. If I were you, I would keep my eye on this fine, young team. They play there home matches at the NOPE courts right next to Brown dormitory in the Sylvan area.

Black-Jewish conflict myth

To the Editor:

In his editorial, (Collegian, Friday Sept. 21, 1979), James Lewis tries to state his case for the view that there is a growing conflict in the U.S. between blacks and Jews, and that, moreover, this conflict is not "something new."

However, a strong case could be made for the exact opposite view—as I will now try to briefly show. As a group, Jews have been strong supporters of the civil rights movement—right from the start—as well as being prominent social activists in other important protest movements such as the Vietnam War Protests. What, in fact, is distressing in the Andrew Young resignation (other than the fact that the U.S. lost a good, outspoken representative in the U.S.) is the possibility that blacks and Jews might now become divided over the issue of Israel and U.S. support for Israel's existence in the Middle East. This would certainly be bad, in view of their close partnership in the past on social and political issues.

The arguments that Lewis gives to show that Jews, as a group, have had an interest in keeping black people in this country oppressed do not show that Jews, as a group, have been interested in keeping blacks down. What is relevent to cite about Allen Bakke is not that he is Jewish. What is relevent about Bakke is that he is a member of a certain group of people in this country (i.e. those that are white, affluent, capitalists, and politically and socially narrow-minded) who oppose an equal distribution and control of the political and economic power in this country.

The fact that Bakke is Jewish is besides the point—and his claim that Jewish people supported the Bakke Decision en masse is false.

Vegetarian, non-smoking, aware person wanted?

Kim Kramer

Are you one of the many left disillusioned after following the lure of off campus housing?

What the Housing Office doesn't reveal is that the accomodation problem is one not only of numbers of dwellings but of the discerning nature of those who want roommates.

What amazed this writer was the overall wholesomeness and intrinsic goodness projected by the notices in the Housing Office and local papers. Nutritionally, socially, ecologically, politically, and culturally aware people are in demand. The decadence and vice that our colleges are supposedly permeated with seems scarce.

If you were rejected for decent off campus housing because you are and unenlightened boor, prefer Macdonalds' Big Macs to soybean and garbonzo sandwiches, or just do not fit in with a happy, well adjusted crowd, help has arrived. The following classified advertisements were compiled for your benefit.

A student bill slowly dying

To the Editor

Last April 18th, the State House of Representatives voted to release to a third reading, House bill Number 2536. This Act would place an undergraduate and a graduate student on the UMass Building Authority, which funds the Residence Halls, Dining Commons, Campus Center, Parking Garage, Alumni Stadium, etc. At the present time this Bill, which would greatly improve student input into the problems dealing with the condition and repair of on-campus buildings, is being victimized by the actions of two individuals who are preventing its progress.

Rep. Frank J. Matrango (D-North Adams), chair of the Education Committee, and Rep. Michael C. Creedon (D-Brockton), the chair of the House Third Reading Committee are refusing to release the Bill from that Committee in spite of a 104-43 vote of the House to do so.

We ask that all students call or write -- Rep. Frank J. Matrango, Rm. 473G, State House, Boston, MA. 02133, (617) 727-2594; Rep. Michael C. Creedon, Rm. 19, State House, Boston, MA. 02133, (617) 727-0290.

Tell them that our rights are being violated and that the bill must be released immediately. If you have any questions or would like to volunteer some help, please come by the Student Senate Office, Rm. 420 in the Sudent Union building or call 545-0341.

Why bother keeping faith

Rusty Denton

Every August at the appointed hour, my baggage returns to its ancestral home nestled atop a hill in the Pioneer Valley. Home to UMass with its beloved ironies and paradoxes. Freshly laundered shirts occupy the same frame as fermenting gym socks; reactionary administrators tussle with my revolutionary classmates; and freshmen gag on their first whiff of seasoned cynicism and grass.

Whatever else may be said about UMass, seasoned cynicism and grass remain unblighted (except by paraquot). The freshman, scrubbed and armed to penetrate the darkest ivory tower, is greeted only by Neanderthalic grunts from upperclassmen, who peer groggily over morning cups of coffee and pools of self pity. Sometimes they peer groggily over joints.

Mostly they appear groggy. Having relinquished all childhood ideals and dreams, many students are engaged in the restless pursuit of whatever is gratifying in life Right Now. They've lost faith in relationships, faith in the system, faith in God, and are in the process of losing faith in themselves. Somehow, being groggy and cynical just comes naturally.

Grogginess, however, isn't a natural phenomenon. It's a personal grudge against the order of things.

So be it.

For in the beginning of our understanding, we knew a word. That word was love. Whoever accepted that word received its name—beloved. And they existed by the word.

And though love caused the existence of all persons, there were those that would not accept it. Though they were beloved, they didn't know the meaning of the word, and they didn't love.

Many of these rebels chose a different word, gratification. Gratification was somehow more exciting at UMass. They could get high on it, get plastered on it, dance to it, and thrill to it in their jolts of sexuality.

Some became gratuitous politicians, and gloried in their righteous deeds. Others became vegetarians, and revelled in their health. A few became technologists, and filled their curiosity with all manner of cleverness.

It was odd that those who chose the way of love expected much and received more. The more "modern" seekers anticipated little and found even less.

It's not taking long for many upperclassmen seekers to become alienated. Statistics showed earliest that they didn't believe in a creator. Later it was found that they were slow to marry and quick to divorce. They've become increasingly unhappy with the system, and now their suicide statistics are rising.

Cynicism strikes again.

Students: Keep the faith

Rob Stein

Not too long ago our President made a request of the American people on nationwide television. He wasn't asking for more funds for defense nor did he request the man on the street to help fight crime. He asked each of us to "say something good about our country."

In the pub where I was watching the address a low chorus of the National Anthem rose amidst jibes and chuckling. A woman said aloud, "A free country. I can choose freely between starving and freezing." I'm sure to most of you, at least to those who bothered to watch the address, the President's suggestion seemed trite.

I snatched my beer from the bar and walked away. Why had it sounded so bad?

It seems we've been anesthetized to thinking much of anything good about our nation and for that matter thinking or saying anything good about much of anything. That's not to say we don't have good reason for that kind of thinking. What effect can a mere tra[illegible] a crooked President and a cascading economy have anyway? They call it disillusionment.

We're disillusioned with government, budget-cut crippled education, and every tried and true foundation, after being tried, mutates far from the truth. So why does a generation so often referred to as serious and working within the system have so little faith in the system?

The answer might lie in our motivations. We work within the system that's true, but not to change that system for the better. We feel we must run with the speed of the treadmill or risk stumbling and be trampled by the crowd at our heels.

We work to survive.

So perhaps the explanation lies in our perception of our society. If we perceive it as an open-jawed demon awaiting our plunge, how can we consider it as anything but bad?

The President must realize this. He must realize before we could possibly muster the tireless energy needed to make any kind of change or sacrifice, we must first admire and respect the system.

So maybe we should try the President's suggestion. Maybe we should try it right here on campus.

Try saying something good about your University and try to ignore the falling bricks.

Spikers set for Eagles

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team will conclude their brief home stand at NOPE gym tonight when they face Boston College at 6:30.

Last year, BC and UMass played twice; UMass beat the Eagles in a close match, then lost to BC in the finals of the Mass. State Tournament-Division I Championships.

UMass coach Elaine Marasco has been experimenting with a type of offense suited for the skills of each player. Though the offense caused some initial confusion when used last Saturday against UNH and Vermont, UMass utilized this more individualized offense effectively to defeat both squads.

"We've tried a 'middle option' to open up our outside hitters," said Marasco, "and it worked. Our blockers kept the other team from scoring and it helped the outside to set up and score."

Marasco's optimism concerning the UMass squad has been improving as well as the skills. "We haven't played to our potential yet," she said, we're improving all the time."

Women runners meet Crimson

The women's cross country team faces Harvard today at Franklin Park in Boston. UMass and Harvard are considered to be two of the top three teams in New England and the meet should be very close. "The meet should be won by just two or three points," Coach Pete Pfitzinger said.

"The whole team is very confident since Saturday's victory," Pfitzinger says of the Minutewomen's win at the Huskie Challenge Invitational in Hartford. "Our runners are very strong, especially at 5,000 meters. It will be their top three against the depth of our top eight," Pfitzinger said.

Women booters face UConn

By ROB EMMONS
Collegian Staff

Coach Arnie Morse is totally confident in the squad he is fielding today against the University of Connecticut, and has every reason to be. His women's soccer team is looking powerful following their triumph in the past weekend's Plymouth State tourney.

In competition with host Plymouth State, Boston College, and the University of New Hampshire, UMass compiled a 2-0-1 record for the bragging rights. Their first contest, vs. UNH, was indicative of the potent scoring attack which will likely characterize this season's games. Nina Holmstom, Maddy Mangini, and Elaine Contant accounted for the goals in a 3-1 win.

Game two featured a superb BC goaltender who held her opponents to only one score, that on Angie Caouette's breakaway for the winner. The skilled netminder had shut down Caouette in two other one-on-one situations.

The one blemish on the UMass tourney mark resulted from the final match with Plymouth State when the hosts notched a goal with two and a half minutes remaining to play. There was little goalie Roxanne Donatini could do as the PSC forward placed the ball in the upper corner of the net (no answer for an earlier Holmstom tally (tl e freshman continues to impress).

It was a frustrating outcome for the tourney visitors, who thoroughly dominated the tilt. The efforts of a fine PSC midfield and goaltender thwarted the twenty shots UMass attack. Multiple opportunities to score yielded only near misses.

The tourney dispelled Coach Morse' earlier question marks about the defense and confirmed his belief in the team's scoring power. Against UConn today he hopes the squad will take control quickly and allow him to substitute freely. After all, the extraordinary depth of the soccer team affords Morse the rare luxury of resting players who merited All-State recognition in high school competition.

You can witness the women's soccer powerhouse at 3:00 today on the lower NOPE fields.

Ruggers seek overdue student recognition

By JEFF ZOUL
Collegian Staff

One sport on the UMass campus which does not attract the attention that it merits, is rugby. The University of Massachusetts Rugby Football Club has been in existence since 1968 and currently consists of 50-60 people. The lack of recognition is due, in large to the fact that the rugby team is not a university varsity sport; It is simply a club, which means that the team is comprised of graduate students, undergraduate students, and faculty members, rather than strictly undergrad students, as in varsity sports.

Dr. Robert Laurence, faculty advisor and coach of the club since its formation in 1968, says that he would have the rugby club organized "no other way than it is now because as a club, we can reach out to anyone affiliated with the university."

UMass rugby consists of both a fall and spring season. They play twenty games over an entire year, in addition to two tournaments. Although UMass does reasonably well--generaly winning 50 per cent of their games--Laurence notes that they would fare considerably better if not for such a tough schedule.

The team often plays against rugby clubs which are not affiliated with a university; are more experienced; and in many case made up of several UMass graduates, according to Laurence. Last year, in the New England College Tournament, UMass placed third out of ten teams.

The standout of the team is David Wilkie, a grad student in wildlife. Laurence describes Wilkie as "an absolutely incredible player; the field general of our team."

In addition to Wilkie, Laurence cites team captain Larry Tebo as a "superb player who has done a great job of putting this team together." Furthermore, although there are only 25 returning players from last spring, Dr. Laurence points out that "we have a good nucleus of young kids. The spirit seems very good for this crew."

A rugby game is made up of two, 15-man teams. The clock is running, which means that time stops only for a serious injury, and there are no substitutions. Because there are no substitutions, the team will generally play three, 8 minute games back-to-back.

Although rugby, as a contact sport, is considered dangerous by many, Laurence points out that there is no blocking and only the ballcarrier may be tackled.

The rugby club plays every Saturday (in front of Boyden when playing at home.) through November. The following Saturday they play the Connecticut Yankees away.

The rugby club is always looking for new members. There are no cuts and everyone plays. Anyone interested in playing is invited to contact Dr. Laurence in the department of Chemical Engineering.

Harriers prepare to race Providence and Harvard

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Providence College and Harvard, ranked one and two in New England will be giving tough competition to the UMass mens cross country team as they square off today at Franklin Park, Boston. Last year UMass lost to both teams with the final scores Providence College 32, Harvard 42, and UMass 49.

"Providence isn't as strong as it was last year," said harrier captain Rick Walls. "I can't know if we'll beat them this early in the season, but I know the scores will be closer than last year," Walls said. "I know we'll be giving Harvard a good run," he added.

So far this season the Minutemen are 1-0, having stopped Boston College 21-35. Cross Country powerhouse Providence College is already 7-0, having already downed Boston University, Maine, Rhode Island, and Maine.

Running in the top spots for UMass will be Walls, junior Kevin Moteni, senior Mike Dorian, and sophomores Paul Beaulieu and Kevin Corcoran. Molteni finished first in Friday's race with BC.

Representing Providence College will be sophomore Ray Tracy, a freshman All-American, Jim Fallon and John Maloney, freshmen from Ireland. Seniors Peter Cooke, Larry Reed and Brian Dillion will be rounding out the team that last year finished first in New England and 12 in the nation.

"UMass provides great opposition," said PC coach Bob Omatto. "Providence is still the team to beat, on paper we're still the stongest of the three, but it could go either school," Omatto added.

The runners to watch for at Harvard are juniors Reed Eichner and John Murphy. Team captain Thad McNulty, freshman Buck Logan and junior Noel Sidmore. "I'm sort of going on past reputation but I figure we'll win," said Harvard coach Bill McCurdy. "We respect UMass they have a fine cross country program, and I know I can expect a good race."

"Providence and Harvard have had the two toughest teams in the past four or five years," said Minuteman coach Ken O'Brien. "Over the past four years we've split with Harvard, but we haven't been able to defeat Providence, so of course we're looking to beat them," said O'Brien.

Stickers splash over Owls in soggy field

By SCOTT BUNGARD

All the coaches polls and pre-season predictions pointed towards a very successful season for Pam Hixon's field hockey team. Thus far, based on last Saturday's 3-1 (away) triumph over division II Westfield State College; the Umies have a lot to look forward to.

"Under the conditions, we played very well. It poured and if it hadn't been on astroturf we couldn't have played," surmised Coach Hixon.

The team took thirty shots on goal as All-Americans Laura O'Neil and Judy Strong notched goals, along with forward Chris Coughlin.

O'Neil scored the first and only goal (unassisted) in the first half and the field was beginning to resemble a swamp.

Opening the second half Koughlin made it 2-0, assisted by forward Julie McHugh. At the fifteen minute mark, however, Westfield made it close on a goal by Kathy Civic.

Undaunted, Judy Strong punched one in two minutes later (unassisted) to close out the scoring at 3-1, UMass.

Hixon said, "We dominated, taking thirty shots to their seven. I thought our passing combinations were excellent considering the field conditions. Defensively, we weren't pressured and had a tendancy to lose concentration. Holding a team to seven shots is a good performance and goalie Karen Stifter played well. Their goal was deflected by one of our players."

The team hosts Keene Thursday at 3 p.m. (NOPE). The JV team, under the guidance of Tami Gannon, takes on Franklin Pierce College at 4:15 (NOPE) in their home opener.

The Umies defeated Keene last year and expect to repeat the feat Thursday. Summing up Hixon, "Everyone is healthy and it was nice to win the first one."

ABC gets 1984 Olympics

By FRED ROTHENBERG
Associated Press

NEW YORK —ABC-TV has wrapped up the television rights to the 1984 summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles, the Associated Press learned yesterday. The winning bid, after the most expensive and competitive bidding war in television history, was believed to be $200 million.

Thus ABC, the No.1-rated network, regains a broadcasting jewel that it lost to NBC in 1980. NBC will televise 152 hours of Olympic coverage from Moscow next July. ABC has the 1980 Winter Games in Lake Placid, N.Y.

ABC executives refused comment yesterday on the status of the Olympic TV contract and referred queries to Roone Arledge, president of the network's news and sports divisions. Arledge was not available for comment. A meeting involving members of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, network executives and representatives of the International Olympic Committee was set for Tuesday at the home of David Wolper, head of the Los Angeles Olympic television committee.

Five organizations made bids to the organizing committee — ABC, CBS, NBC, the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network (ESPN) and Tandem Productions. Industry sources said NBC bid $150 million, CBS $160 million and ABC $200 million. Tandem's bid was believed to be less than the networks and ESPN was looking for the peripheral events not covered by the winning broadcast organization.

The importance of having the Summer Olympics is underscored by the fact that ABC became the top-rated network in 1976 after televising the Montreal Olympics. Fred Silverman, president of NBC, predicts his third-rated network will zoom into the No.1 position by Christmas, 1980 — less than five months after the Moscow Olympics.

It is also underscored by the phenomenal fee of $200 million, more than double the $87 million that NBC paid for the 1980 Summer Olympics. NBC has sold all its available advertising for the Moscow Games and expects to make around $25 million after all costs.

By 1984, ABC can be expected to charge more than the $1 million for every 6¼ minutes of commercial network time. But it seems unlikely that ABC will make money because, as host nation for the Los Angeles Games, ABC has to provide the world feed to all other countries broadcasting the Games. That means that ABC must have equipment and personnel covering every competitor for every event.

Senate ok's Fonda-Hayden admission fee

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

An ammendment to the Distinguished Visitors Program constitution to allow the organization to charge $1 admission fee to the Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden appearance this Sunday was approved last night by the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The motion—opposed by the Veteran's Student Organization—was passed by a 53 to 13 vote following a heated debate between VSO members and DVP officials and their supporters.

Howard Goldman, Vice-President of DVP, said the veteran's group had "no right" to try to stop the appearance of Fonda and Hayden. He said when he tried to communicate with VSO prior to the meeting they would not cooperate. Most of the university community supported the appearance and only a small group of veterans had protested the program, he said.

Goldman said the $1 fee was being charged to help offset the program cost so that DVP would not exhaust this semester's funds. He said the appearance would cost DVP an estimated $7000 and that their budget for this semester was only $8000. He said that by charging the admission fee, DVP will have about $5000 for the remainder of the semester.

Results of senate vote and related story on page 3.

Senator Paul Withers, a VSO member, said DVP did not obtain correct expense figures from the physical plant and others. Veteran Albert Sparks said it made "no sense" for Fonda and Hayden to be paid. Other VSO members attacked DVP for their handling of the situation.

Kenneth MacCrae, a UMass graduate and veteran of the Vietnam war, said Fonda and Hayden should have the right to speak, and that VSO's contention that it would hurt their program was invalid.

Bruce Levy, Southwest co-president, said, "The right to dissent is the right of freedom of speech and if the veterans have that right, then so does Jane Fonda.

Goldman later said tickets for the speech would be available outside the Hatch and at the Tix counter in the Student Union from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. today and tomorrow. He said anyone with University identification will be allowed to purchase up to 2 tickets. UMass IDs will also be required for entrance to the event in the Curry Hicks Cage, he said.

...while denying Pierce impeachment talks

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted against suspending one of its constitutional laws to discuss a motion to impeach acting Student Attorney General William Pierce.

Senator James Lewis motioned to impeach Pierce because "I don't feel we should have an appointed Attorney General related politically to the senate presidents" and because "other people were doing his (Pierce's) work over the summer."

Pierce was originally appointed by former co-President Herbert Tyson to replace an ousted attorney general. Lewis said he believes Pierce was reappointed to the ost by current co-Presidents Brian Burke and Richard LaVoice solely because Pierce campaigned for the two men when they ran for office last April.

Senate law provides that the presidents choose an attorney general, and then their selection must be approved by the senate.

Lewis said Pierce, who had been chosen as attorney general with the intent that Pierce work in that capacity this past summer, had "done nothing the whole summer."

"I was working for the United States Congress in Washington as an intern," Pierce said of his summer activity.

"When I was appointed to this position by Herb Tyson, I took it without the intention of keeping it on a permanent basis. I've tried to reconstruct the student judiciary by working closely with Dean (William F.) Field. I don't feel I should be impeached because I haven't gone against anything in the student government constitution."

Pierce did not violate a senate law by not working as attorney general during the summer, LaVoice said. He said the senate "did not even have funding for the job until he (Pierce) had already left for Washington."

The senate is presently choosing members of a new search committee to appoint a permanent attorney general. Pierce, who Burke and LaVoice last May chose to chair the committee, said he will not seek the permanent position.

Senator Julie Robinson, who served a paralegal internship for UMass Legal Services last semester and assumed the attorney general's summer duties, said she will run for attorney general.

"I did the work of the attorney general over the summer because Will was not here. I feel I'm being denied the job technically because of the internal politics of the senate," Robinson said.

Robinson, along with senators Ann Bolger and Craig Sherwood, was recommended as a candidate for attorney general by a search committee formed last spring. Burke and LaVoice chose Bolger, but the senate voted them down. The search committee did not provide the senate with substantial reasons to vote for Bolger, senator Rich Tuttle last night said. The senate then approved the president's reappointment of Pierce.

A motion to deny Burke and LaVoice the power to select an attorney general from the search committees' recommendations was also defeated last night, 38-20.

The senate chose Bari Njiri and Beth Rosenberg as two members of the 9-member search committee for attorney general. Other members will be chosen at a later date.

Legislature delays vote on holiday

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press

BOSTON The state Senate blocked quick action on a papal holiday bill yesterday, and the decision was put over until today.

Senate President William M. Bulger promised that there definitely will be some kind of a holiday Monday.

University officials would be expected to abide by any bill signed by King, and will not take action on possible Monday class cancellations until the legislature makes a decision, Arthur Clifford of the UMass News Bureau said yesterday.

The Senate, Bulger told reporters, has attempted to "introduce some rationality" into the idea. This was a reference to a Senate change, unacceptable to the House, that would allow each local governing body in the state to ignore the holiday.

While, he said, not many would do this, they ought to have that "flexibility."

Asked if the House version of a holiday honoring the visit of Pope John Paul II was irrational, Bulger said, "I would not...say it as explicitly."

If the impasse continues, Bulger said, the Senate would back down and accept the House version.

He said there are some communities in the district served by Sen. Robert D. Wetmore, DBarre, that do not want school called off Monday. Wetmore filed the amendment which would allow communities to waive the provisions of the special holiday.

Also, Bulger said, the Worcester city manager has complained that the holiday would cost $150,000 to $200,000. Bulger said he did not know what those expenses might involve. Sen. Daniel J. Foley, D-Worcester, said these would be extra costs for hospital, police and other expenses.

An aide to Gov. Edward J. King said the original holiday bill did not call for overtime pay rates for those who work on that day.

The much-revised bill flew through the House, without debate, at 11 a.m. but was amended later in the Senate. The House would not accept the changes, and that was where things stood overnight, with a conference committee from both branches seeking a compromise.

Treasury may 'coin' dollar bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The dollar bill could become a thing of the past and tomorrow's money might be made of plastic if Congress follows the recommendations released Tuesday by a Carter administration task force on money.

The task force suggested that the government begin replacing the paper dollar with the new Susan B. Anthony dollar coin and, later, with $2 bills.

It also suggested that Congress consider eliminating the half-dollar coin, making pennies out of aluminum alloy if copper prices rise too high and urged a study of using plastic in future currency.

Possible elimination of the dollar bill was immediately attacked by Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., chairman of the House Banking subcommittee on consumer affairs. Annunzio told a hearing that he would "do everything within my power to keep the dollar bill in circulation."

Rose Kennedy hospitalized

BOSTON — Kennedy family matriarch Rose Kennedy, described by her doctor as "a tough old gal," was operated on Wednesday for removal of a section of intestine that was damaged by a hernia.

"The operation went well," her doctors said in a statement issued after more than two hours of surgery.

Mrs. Kennedy, 89, the mother of two senators and a president, entered New England Baptist Hospital on Tuesday complaining of nausea.

Dr. Russell S. Boles, a gastroenterologist who is one of her regular physicians, discovered the hernia at 4 a.m. Wednesday, and she underwent surgery about five hours later.

Ex-reverend rapist denied bail

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A former minister convicted of raping a young girl has returned to jail after being free on bail since early this year.

Former Rev. Roy Lec's appeal was rejected about a month ago, and last Friday the state Supreme Judicial Court revoked his bail.

He surrendered himself Tuesday to Hampshire County House of Correction officials. It was not clear whether the court had approved his request to serve his sentence in that jail or in Walpole state prison, to which he was originally sentenced.

Leo had served 11 months of a six-to-10 year sentence. State corrections policy ordinarily entitles a prisoner to consideration for parole after two-thirds of a term has been served, meaning Leo might have little more than three years to serve.

Brown woos New Hampshire with promise to stop Seabrook

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — California Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. says that if he is elected president he will keep nuclear power plants now being built, including the controversial Seabrook station, from going into operation.

Brown, an unannounced candidate in New Hampshire's lead-off presidential primary next February, is billing himself as the only presidential contender flatly against nuclear power.

"I believe Seabrook is a mistake because it's neither economically or environmentally sound," Brown said in a recent telephone interview. "It's obvious that the people of New Hampshire would be far better served if that plant is not brought into operation and the funds and site used for something more sensible."

The plant has been the focal point of the anti-nuclear movement in America. More than 2,000 persons have been arrested at the plant's construction site during the past five years.
